LINDT & SPRUNGLI AG AGM - 16-04-2025

2. Approve the Remuneration Report

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, being under 200% of the fixed salary. There are claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is welcomed. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. On balance, abstention is recommended.

7.1.1. Elect Ernst Tanner - Chair (Executive)

Executive Chair. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that the Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Holding an executive position is incompatible with this and a vote to Oppose is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

Results: For: 76.4, Abstain: 1.7, Oppose/Withhold: 21.9,

7.1.2. Elect Dieter Weisskopf - Vice Chair (Non Executive)

Member of the Audit committee. Not considered independent as the director was previously employed by the Company as Chief Executive Officer from October 2016 to September 2022. It is considered that the audit committee should be comprised of exclusively independent members.

Additionally, he is the chair of the Sustainability committee. It was reported in December 2024, that an in-depth investigation by US TV network CBS and Swiss public broadcaster SRF recently revealed that the chocolate manufacturer Mars and the Swiss company Lindt & Sprüngli may be using child labor in Ghana. This can lead to financial or reputational consequences for the company. As he is the chair of the sustainability committee, he is considered to have responsibility over the company's sustainability practices.

For the above reasons, opposition is recommended.

0030. Approve Remuneration Policy

It is proposed to approve the remuneration policy with a binding vote. Variable remuneration appears to be consistently capped, although the pay-out may exceed 200% of the fixed remuneration for the highest paid director. The Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets for performance criteria for its variable remuneration component, which may lead to overpayment against underperformance. There are claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is welcomed. Nevertheless, opposition is recommended based on potential excessive variable remuneration and absence of quantified targets.

10. Approve Remuneration Policy of Corporate Officers

It is proposed to approve the remuneration policy of corporate officers. Variable remuneration appears to be consistently capped, although the payout may exceed 200% of fixed salary. In addition, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets for the performance criteria of its variable remuneration component, which as a consequence may lead to overpayment against underperformance. In addition, there are no claw-back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration component which makes it unlikely that shareholders will be able to reclaim any variable remuneration unfairly paid out. On these grounds, opposition is recommended.

20. Approve Issue of Shares for Private Placement

21. Authorise the Board to Increase the Number of Shares Issued in case of Exceptional Demand

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 15%, in case of exceptional demand.

A green shoe authorisation enables an authorization of additional shares in the event of exceptional public demand. In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 15% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. Given the potential for inequitable treatment of shareholders, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

Results: For: 83.4, Abstain: 0.2, Oppose/Withhold: 16.4,

22. Approve Authority to Increase Authorised Share Capital

Authority is sought to increase the authorised share capital of the Company up to EUR 20 million. The increase without pre-emptive rights is capped at 10% of the share capital. This is within recommended limits. Support is recommended.

23. Approve Issue of Shares for Contribution in Kind

The Board requests authority to issue shares and capital securities in consideration for contributions in kind up to 10% of the issued share capital over a period of 26 months. The proposal is within legal limits and cannot be used in time of public offer. Support is recommended.

24. Issuance of Shares for Existing Incentive Plan

Proposal to allot shares to Executive Directors and Senior Management as part of the annual variable remuneration accrued in the past year. Performance targets and underlying achievements have not been fully disclosed and quantified, although shareholders will be able to vote on this separately on the item for the approval of the remuneration report. Nevertheless, payments in shares are welcomed as they are considered to be linked with shareholders' interests and this proposal will not entail an authority for additional remuneration to executive. On balance, and despite standing concerns on lack of disclosure, support is recommended.

BANK OF AMERICA CORPORATION AGM - 22-04-2025

2.. Advisory Vote on Executive Compensation

The Company has submitted a proposal for shareholder ratification of its executive compensation policy and practices. The voting outcome for this resolution reflects the balance of opinion on the adequacy of disclosure, the balance of performance and reward and the terms of executive employment. The compensation rating is: BEB. Based on this rating, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

Results: For: 73.3, Abstain: 0.4, Oppose/Withhold: 26.3,

4.. Amend Existing Long Term Incentive Plan

The Board proposes to amend and restate the Bank of America Corporation Equity Plan (BACEP) to: (i) increase the number of shares available for grant by 100 million; (ii) cap total annual compensation for non-employee directors at $1 million, including cash and equity, with exceptions for donations and special services; and (iii) extend the Plan's expiration. Awards will vest over a three-year period, and quantified performance targets have been set, which is above market practice. However, the potential total reward raises concerns over excessiveness, and the three-year vesting is considered short term. Participation is subject to the discretion of the Compensation and Benefits Committee, which may grant awards to selected employees and directors. The inclusion of non-executive directors is misaligned with good governance, as variable pay may compromise their independent oversight role. Opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Requesting the Nomination of more Director Candidates than Board Seats

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Jing Zhao, recommends that Bank of America undertake a reform of its Board election process by allowing more director candidates to be nominated than there are seats to be filled. The supporting statement suggests that corporate boards in the United States lack democratic accountability and resemble a form of oligarchy. Reference is made to Aristotle's Politics and the increasing disparity in wealth, including a CEO pay ratio of 230:1 at the company in 2023, as evidence of systemic imbalance. The proponent argues that excessive executive compensation contributes to social and economic instability and that shareholders at several major companies have recently opposed high pay packages. It is proposed that allowing shareholders to choose from a wider pool of candidates would lead to more representative and accountable governance. The resolution further recommends that any implementation of this change be made in accordance with existing contractual obligations and with flexibility in how the company structures the nomination process.

Company's response: The Company is not supportive of the proposal. It is stated that the current director nomination and selection framework is effective in identifying highly qualified individuals through a process informed by best practices and regulatory expectations. The Board expresses concern that increasing the number of candidates beyond available seats could disrupt Board cohesion and reduce its overall effectiveness. It is noted that such a framework might discourage capable candidates from standing for election and could introduce inefficiencies in the evaluation process. Shareholders are already provided with mechanisms to influence Board composition, including a proxy access bylaw which permits eligible shareholders to nominate directors. The Company also points to a majority voting standard and director resignation policy as mechanisms ensuring accountability. In view of these factors, it is concluded that the requested change is unnecessary and may not serve shareholders' best interests. The Board therefore recommends that shareholders vote against the proposal.

PIRC recommendation: It is considered that permitting the nomination of more director candidates than there are board seats available may enhance the democratic nature of board elections and strengthen shareholder rights. Providing shareholders with greater choice could lead to a more representative and accountable board. While concerns regarding board dynamics are acknowledged, the proposal allows for implementation in a manner consistent with contractual obligations and good governance practice. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Board Oversight of Risks Related to Animal Welfare

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Bank of America publish a report describing whether and how the Board exercises oversight of risks related to animal welfare. It is argued that animal welfare concerns pose material financial, reputational, and operational risks, particularly in relation to financing activities connected to animal testing, factory farming, food safety, and biodiversity impacts. The proponent contends that these issues are not currently addressed in the company's governance policies or public disclosures, despite the recognised link between nature loss and systemic environmental risks. Reference is made to the Company's financing of factory farms and its poor performance on independent animal welfare rankings. It is suggested that failing to disclose oversight mechanisms may create the perception of governance gaps, which could affect stakeholder trust. The proposal asserts that producing a report on the Board's oversight of such risks would improve transparency, mitigate reputational harm, and bring the Company into alignment with emerging investor expectations on environmental and social due diligence.

Company's response: The Company is not supportive of the proposal. It is stated that oversight of environmental and sustainability risks, including those related to animal welfare, is already conducted through the Board's Corporate Governance Committee and Enterprise Risk Committee. The Company points to its Environmental and Social Risk Policy Framework (ESRP Framework) as evidence of an existing robust process, including enhanced due diligence on transactions involving sensitive environmental and social issues. It is noted that reputational risks-such as those connected to animal welfare-are escalated for further review when appropriate. The Framework is said to enable the Company to identify, assess, and manage material risks arising from client activities. The Board considers that preparing the requested report would be duplicative and unnecessary, given the existing policies, committee oversight, and public disclosures. It is further argued that such reporting would not provide shareholders with meaningful additional information and would represent an inefficient use of company resources.

PIRC recommendation: It is considered that reporting on the Board's oversight of risks related to animal welfare would improve transparency and demonstrate responsiveness to emerging environmental and social concerns. While the existence of internal due diligence procedures is acknowledged, a clear public statement of how animal welfare is factored into governance and risk management would assist in addressing investor expectations and reputational concerns. Enhanced disclosure may also provide reassurance that such issues are being appropriately considered at board level. Support is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Lobbying Alignment with Bank of America's Climate Goals

Proponent's argument: Sada Geuss request that Bank of America produce an annual report analysing whether and how its lobbying and policy influence activities align with its 2030 sectoral emissions reduction target and 2050 net zero goals. The resolution highlights the systemic financial risks posed by climate change and notes that corporate lobbying inconsistent with climate action could undermine these targets. The proponent points to gaps in the bank's current disclosures, including limited transparency around direct lobbying and memberships in trade associations that have opposed key climate legislation, such as the Inflation Reduction Act. It is argued that such associations' positions may contradict the Company's stated climate ambitions and pose reputational and systemic risks. The proposal urges the Company to adopt best practices in climate lobbying disclosure, citing Unilever and Enel as examples. It is further stated that investors require more detailed reporting in order to assess the extent to which the bank's policy engagement supports or potentially undermines its public commitments to climate action.

Company's response: The Company does not support the proposal. It is stated that current disclosures already provide extensive information about lobbying and political activities, including those related to the Company's climate strategy. These include disclosures on federal lobbying expenditures, trade association memberships, and the Company's involvement in climate policy through its public policy team. The Board maintains that these activities are subject to oversight by the Corporate Governance Committee and are aligned with the Company's commitment to responsible growth and achieving net zero emissions. It is also stated that membership in trade associations does not imply blanket endorsement of all their positions, and that the Company actively engages within these bodies to express its views. The Board further argues that it is already ranked highly in political disclosure indexes, and that producing an additional report would be duplicative, offer no material benefit to shareholders, and would divert resources away from advancing climate and business objectives.

PIRC recommendation: It is considered that the alignment between corporate lobbying activities and publicly stated climate goals is a material issue for investors.

Although the Company discloses some information on lobbying and trade association memberships, the extent to which these activities support or contradict climate objectives remains unclear. A specific report addressing this question would enhance transparency and accountability, particularly in cases where misalignment may present reputational or systemic risk. Similar reports published by peers demonstrate the feasibility and utility of this type of disclosure. Support is recommended.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Disclosure of Energy Financing Ratio

Proponent's argument: The proponents request that Bank of America disclose an annual Energy Supply Ratio (ESR), defined as the proportion of financing for low-carbon energy relative to fossil fuel energy. The proposal argues that such a metric would provide decision-useful information to investors by illustrating the extent to which the Company's financial activities align with its stated climate goals, including its 2050 net zero commitment and its $1 trillion sustainable finance target by 2030. It is stated that although the Company discloses other climate-related metrics, the ESR would offer a clearer view of energy financing allocation and support investor evaluation of transition leadership. The proponents point to Bloomberg's standardised ESR methodology and note that several leading banks have already committed to disclose this ratio, demonstrating feasibility and emerging best practice. A public ESR, including methodology and classification criteria, is seen as a necessary addition to current disclosures in order to assess how the Company is responding to climate-related financial risks and opportunities.

Company's response: The Company is not supportive of the proposal. It is stated that significant resources have already been dedicated to developing a comprehensive climate strategy and associated disclosures, including emissions targets and progress updates published in its Sustainability and Task Force on Climate-related Financial Disclosures (TCFD) reports. The Company notes that third-party organisations, including Bloomberg, already estimate and publish energy financing ratios using standardised methods, offering comparability across institutions. The Board expresses concern that individual company-reported ESRs would rely on varied methodologies, reducing comparability and potentially confusing stakeholders. Additionally, it is argued that developing an internal methodology and tracking system would be resource-intensive and would not result in meaningful additional insights for shareholders. In view of these factors, the Board concludes that producing the requested ESR disclosure is not an efficient or necessary use of company resources.

PIRC recommendation: It is considered that enhanced disclosure on the Company's relative financing of low-carbon and fossil fuel energy is relevant and useful for investors seeking to assess progress against stated net zero goals. While third-party metrics may offer broad insight, company-reported data with transparent methodologies is viewed as more credible and accountable. As other financial institutions adopt similar disclosure practices, a consistent and clearly defined ESR would help support market expectations and comparability. Support is recommended.

Proponent Shareholder: Mr. John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Pfizer seek shareholder approval for any new or renewed severance arrangements for Named Executive Officers that exceed 2.99 times the sum of base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal aims to close perceived loopholes that allow non-cash components, such as accelerated equity awards, to bypass existing shareholder approval thresholds. It defines severance broadly to include all forms of compensation provided due to termination and applies to both cash and non-cash forms. The proponent argues that current severance limitations only apply to cash components and do not cover lavish non-cash awards, thus circumventing shareholder oversight. This measure is not intended to limit compensation, including long-term equity incentives, but to ensure accountability through a non-binding shareholder vote when severance packages are deemed excessive. The proposal draws parallels with past successful votes at companies like FedEx, AbbVie, and Fiserv, where similar resolutions gained majority support. It also points out that current Say-on-Pay votes do not separately address golden parachutes. Ultimately, the proposal is framed as a safeguard, enhancing transparency without undermining Pfizer's ability to attract or retain executive talent.

Company's response: The Board opposes the proposal, arguing that Pfizer already limits executive cash severance to 2.99 times the sum of base salary and target bonus, and any excess requires shareholder approval. The company's existing Executive Severance Plan, in place since 2009, is presented as sufficient and consistent with market best practices. Pfizer claims that the proposed changes would disincentivize the use of performance based long-term incentives, which are a core part of its pay-for-performance philosophy. The Board warns that requiring shareholder votes on severance packages exceeding the cap, including non-cash elements, could delay or disrupt leadership transitions and impair Pfizer's competitiveness in attracting or retaining key talent. Further, they note that a similar proposal in 2023 received under 10% support. The company stresses that since 2009, no cash severance has exceeded the policy limit and suggests that adding additional requirements could introduce legal and logistical complications, especially in change-in-control scenarios. Pfizer contends that its current severance framework provides the flexibility needed to protect shareholder interests while managing executive transitions effectively, and therefore sees no added value in adopting this proposal.

PIRC analysis: The company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact; ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). On the contrary; this proposal is considered to be an advance in corporate governance; as it will allow to reduce the gap between shareowners and management. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Religious Discrimination Against Employees

Proponent Shareholder: Kelly Aimone, represented by Bowyer Research Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests Pfizer to conduct and publish a report evaluating the risks associated with religious discrimination against employees. The proponent argues that Pfizer, as one of the largest employers in the U.S., should be proactive in promoting religious inclusion by supporting faith-based employee resource groups (ERGs), which are currently absent despite existing ERGs for other identity groups. Citing external studies like the Viewpoint Diversity Score and the 2023 Freedom at Work survey, the proposal claims many employees fear repercussions for expressing religious views, even outside the workplace. It warns that recent Supreme Court decisions have broadened religious protections, implying that the lack of faith-based ERGs may present legal and reputational risks. The proponent believes that embracing religious diversity through formal structures will enhance talent attraction, employee engagement, and corporate culture. The requested report should evaluate these risks without disclosing proprietary information or pending litigation matters.

Company's response: The company opposes the proposal, stating that an additional report is unnecessary and would not enhance shareholder value. Pfizer asserts it already upholds a strong non-discrimination framework that includes religion among other protected characteristics, enforced through comprehensive policies, including an Equal Employment Opportunity policy and an anonymous reporting system. The company highlights mechanisms like its annual employee survey ("Pfizer Pulse"), safe space initiatives, and an Office of the Ombuds that facilitate employee feedback and support. Pfizer also states it has a robust religious accommodation policy in place, and that its People Experience team is trained to address related issues. The company views its existing DEI efforts as sufficient and believes they already encompass religious diversity. The Board concludes that the requested report would be redundant, citing its confidence in Pfizer's current practices to safeguard religious inclusion and employee well-being. Therefore, the Board unanimously recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The proposal requests the Company to issue a report evaluating the risks related to religious discrimination, framed in terms of supporting religious expression and faith-based employee resource groups (ERGs). While the protection of employees from discrimination on the basis of religion is an important principle already enshrined in law and in many corporate non-discrimination policies, this resolution is part of a broader campaign by right-wing advocacy groups to reframe corporate diversity efforts around ideological and religious identity, often in opposition to existing diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI) initiatives. The proponent references tools and surveys developed by conservative think tanks to challenge prevailing DEI practices and positions religious employee groups as being unfairly excluded. While the resolution may appear to promote inclusivity, its intent is more aligned with inserting ideological agendas into corporate governance and weakening support for other protected categories. Opposition is recommended.

Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing virtual-only meetings.

11.. Elect Mark A. Schulz - Senior Independent Director

Non-Executive Director and Chair of the Nominating and Governance committee. Not considered independent owing to a tenure on the board of over 9 years. It is considered that this committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members.

Additionally, the level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall.

Based on PIRC's overall assessment of the company's transition planning and climate governance capabilities, the company was rated Red, indicating that it falls significantly short of PIRC's expectations. In particular, the company has failed to commit to net zero emissions by 2050. As such, it is recommended to oppose the re-election of the chair of the committee which reviews sustainability related matters.

4.. Stockholder Resolution: Excessive Golden Parachutes

Proponent's argument Shareholders request that the Board seek shareholder approval of any senior manager's new or renewed pay package that provides for severance or termination payments with an estimated value exceeding 2.99 times the sum of the executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal only applies to the Named Executive Officers. Shareholders argue the following: "Severance or termination payments" include cash, equity or other pay that is paid out or vests due to a senior executive's termination for any reason. Payments include those provided under employment agreements, severance plans, and change-in-control clauses in long-term equity plans, but not life insurance, pension benefits, or deferred compensation earned and vested prior to termination. [...] This proposal places no limit on long-term equity pay or any other type pay. This proposal thus has no impact on the ability to attract executive talent and does not discourage the use of long-term equity pay because it places no limit on golden parachutes. It simply requires that overly rich golden parachutes be subject to a non-binding shareholder vote at a shareholder meeting already scheduled for other matters."

Company's response The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "PACCAR has excellent corporate governance policies and practices that enhance stockholder returns. Its conservative policies ensure that the Company is governed in accordance with the highest standards of integrity. The Board regularly reviews developments in executive compensation and thoughtfully evaluates programs and practices to serve the best interests of the Company and its stockholders. [...] the PACCAR proxy statement describes the effects of an NEO's termination under the Company's Long-Term Incentive Plan. Unvested equity awards will only vest upon an NEO's retirement or death. The maximum estimated value of these awards on the grant date is significantly lower than the 2.99 times an NEO's base salary and target annual bonus."

PIRC analysis: The use of a 2.99x threshold is consistent with industry standards and serves as a prudent trigger for shareholder scrutiny, especially given recent precedents at peer companies. The Board's assurance that its current arrangements fall below the threshold is helpful, but not a reason to oppose a vote mechanism that would activate only if future packages exceed that level. The proponent's framing is also careful not to restrict the company's ability to pay competitively, only to require transparency and a formal voice for shareholders in cases of unusually high termination pay. This does not constrain long-term incentive programs or executive recruitment. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Transparency in Lobbying

Proponent's argument: The stockholders of IBM request the preparation of a report, updated annually, disclosing: 1. Company policy and procedures governing lobbying, both direct and indirect, and grassroots lobbying communications. 2. Payments by IBM used for (a) direct or indirect lobbying or (b) grassroots lobbying communications, in each case including the amount of the payment and the recipient. 3. Description of management's decision-making process and the Board's oversight for making payments described above. Shareholders argue the following: "Unlike many of its peers, IBM fails to disclose its payments to trade associations and social welfare groups, or the amounts used for lobbying, to stockholders. IBM belongs to the Business Roundtable and US Chamber Commerce, which together have spent over $2.3 billion on federal lobbying since 1998. IBM's social welfare group disclosure includes the Alliance for Competitive Taxation but leaves others out, like the Bay Area Council and Future of Privacy Forum. IBM's lack of disclosure presents reputational risk when its lobbying contradicts company public positions. For example, IBM believes in addressing climate change, yet the Business Roundtable filed an amicus brief opposing the Securities and Exchange Commission climate risk disclosure rules."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "IBM's public policy advocacy spans a range of issues relevant to our business, clients, stockholders, employees, communities and other stakeholders. We engage leaders worldwide to promote ideas that can help spur growth and innovation with new technologies, or address societal changes, such as building a skilled and diverse workforce. IBM has always been committed to meaningful management, oversight, and accurate reporting with respect to our public policy engagement, including with respect to trade associations, and we consistently seek to provide our stockholders with relevant data regarding our public policy engagement. [...] As part of the Board's oversight function, the Company's management periodically reports to its Board about IBM's policies and practices in connection with governmental relations, public policy and related expenditures. IBM's senior management, under the leadership of IBM Government and Regulatory Affairs, closely monitors and coordinates all public policy advocacy efforts, as well as lobbying activities."

PIRC analysis: Political spending is considered to be a different issue than lobbying expenditures. Links to public disclosures of lobbying at the state and federal level are not the same as full disclosure published on the company's website. Moreover, it is to the benefit of the company and its shareholders to be open about lobbying activities and so avoid any suspicion and any damage that may cause to the company's reputation, that the company may be using shareholders' funds in an inappropriate way to gain undue influence. The request for a report is considered reasonable and a vote for the resolution is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Vote regarding Excessive Golden Parachutes

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Citi to adopt a policy requiring shareholder approval for any severance or termination payments to Named Executive Officers exceeding 2.99 times base salary plus target short-term bonus. This would apply to all forms of compensation triggered by termination-including accelerated equity and waived performance conditions-but excludes life insurance, vested pensions, or earned deferred pay. The goal is not to cap pay or deter long-term equity awards, but to introduce a check on overly generous exit packages through a non-binding shareholder vote. The proposal addresses the gap in current Say-on-Pay votes, which don't isolate golden parachute issues. It seeks to ensure accountability and improve governance without affecting the company's flexibility in talent retention. Recent support for similar measures at companies like FedEx and AbbVie underscores growing investor concern. The policy would serve as a safeguard, comparable to a speed limit, offering shareholders a voice when excessive packages are proposed.

Company's response: Citi opposes the proposal, stating it already has robust safeguards to prevent excessive severance, including a $500,000 cap on broad-based U.S. severance benefits and a 2002 policy requiring shareholder approval for payouts exceeding three times income post-change in control. The company argues the proposal is misaligned with its compensation structure, which lacks short-term target bonuses, and warns of interpretive challenges. Citi also stresses that global compliance requirements may mandate certain severance terms, and limiting flexibility could hinder its ability to attract and retain top talent. The proposal's generic language and rigid formula are viewed as incompatible with Citi's business model. Management believes existing oversight mechanisms-such as board committee review and regulatory compliance-are sufficient, and that the resolution would impose unnecessary complexity without improving governance.

PIRC Recommendation: PIRC considers this a reasonable request that strengthens shareholder oversight on executive severance. It does not restrict Citi's ability to offer competitive compensation but ensures transparency and accountability when severance exceeds a generous threshold. The company's concerns about ambiguity do not outweigh the clear governance benefits, and recent investor backing for similar proposals suggests this is in line with market expectations. For these reasons, support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Vote on Report on Indigenous Peoples' rights

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace

Proponent's argument: The proponents request a report on the effectiveness of Citi's policies, practices, and performance indicators in respecting internationally recognised Indigenous Peoples' rights within corporate and project financing. They cite Citi's financing of controversial projects such as the Dakota Access Pipeline and Enbridge's Line 3 and Line 5, which have been linked to Indigenous rights violations and environmental damage. The proposal highlights Indigenous opposition, legal rulings against such projects, and reputational risks for Citi. The proponents also point to Citi's support of companies like Petroperú and Frontera Energy, both facing Indigenous protests and oil spills in the Amazon. They argue that Citi's 2024 Indigenous Peoples' Rights report was inadequate and lacked stakeholder perspectives. Additionally, Citi's 2024 withdrawal from the Equator Principles raises concerns over its environmental and human rights commitments. Given these factors, proponents believe more robust and transparent reporting is necessary to assess risk exposure and ensure respect for Free, Prior and Informed Consent (FPIC) across Citi's lending practices.

Company's response: Citi recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the requested reporting is unnecessary due to existing comprehensive disclosures. In 2024, Citi released a detailed Indigenous Peoples' Rights report outlining its due diligence procedures, client engagement, and internal controls through the Environmental and Social Risk Management (ESRM) framework. The company emphasises its long-standing leadership in human rights disclosures, including being the first U.S. bank to adopt the UN Guiding Principles Reporting Framework. Citi's ESRM Policy includes enhanced due diligence and a focus on Free, Prior and Informed Consent for Indigenous Peoples in project-related finance. Citi highlights its ability to engage clients, decline financing when risks are too high, and escalate unresolved issues for senior review. While acknowledging Indigenous rights as a critical concern, Citi maintains that further reporting would be duplicative and that its current governance, oversight, and public transparency already address the intent of the proposal. Therefore, it opposes the resolution.

PIRC Recommendation: PIRC believes the requested report would provide meaningful insight into how Citi manages material human rights risks tied to Indigenous communities, particularly given its involvement in high-risk projects and its recent withdrawal from the Equator Principles. While Citi highlights existing policies and disclosures, these fall short of fully addressing stakeholder concerns and fail to demonstrate the effectiveness of outcomes. A more detailed, stakeholder-informed report would enhance accountability and help investors assess exposure to reputational and legal risks. Given rising investor expectations and the potential material impacts, support is recommended.

*7.. Shareholder Vote on Financial Statement Assumptions and Climate ChangeProponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Citi produce an audited report analysing how applying the findings of the Energy Policy Research Foundation (EPRF) and similar studies would affect the assumptions and estimates underlying its financial statements. These would include valuations tied to commodity and carbon pricing, asset lives, capital expenditures, and impairments. The proposal argues that Citi's net-zero policies are based on flawed assumptions from the IEA's Net Zero Emissions scenario and similar models, which the EPRF contends underestimate the role of fossil fuels and overstate the feasibility of renewable energy transitions. The resolution expresses concern that Citi's current climate strategy could expose it to financial risk if global energy policy or economic conditions deviate from these scenarios. The proponents suggest that renewable energy investments themselves may become "stranded assets" if based on unrealistic projections, and warn that most countries are unlikely to eliminate fossil fuel usage entirely. The report is requested to be published by February 2026, at reasonable cost, and excluding proprietary information.

Company's response: Citi opposes the proposal, asserting that it already applies rigorous, audited financial reporting standards and a comprehensive climate risk management framework. Citi explains that asset valuations are governed under GAAP and audited for compliance with FAS 157, ensuring objectivity. Strategic planning decisions are informed by a wide range of data sources, scenario analyses, and regulatory frameworks such as OCC 2023-33 and SR 23-9, which set expectations for managing climate-related financial risks. Citi highlights that it incorporates both extreme and probable climate outcomes into strategic planning to ensure financial resilience. The company's net-zero strategy is supported by client engagement and aligns with business opportunities in the energy transition. Citi believes the proposed report would duplicate existing processes and is unnecessary given the transparency already provided in its 10-K filings, Climate Report, and Climate Report Supplement. Accordingly, the Board recommends shareholders vote against the resolution.

PIRC Recommendation: PIRC opposes this resolution. The proposal is based on a rejection of widely accepted scientific and regulatory consensus around climate risk and mischaracterises the foundation of Citi's net-zero strategy. Citi already discloses material climate-related risks in line with market standards and regulatory requirements. Producing an additional report grounded in contested assumptions would not enhance governance or risk management and may instead undermine investor confidence in Citi's climate leadership. Support is not warranted, and opposition is recommended.

*8.. Shareholder Vote on Risks Relating to Animal WelfareProponent Shareholder: Harrington Investments, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Citi publish a report disclosing whether and how its Board oversees material risks related to animal welfare. They argue that inadequate oversight of animal welfare-particularly in the context of factory farming-presents financial, operational, and reputational risks, including disease transmission, environmental degradation, and food safety concerns. The proposal notes Citi is among the top three financiers of factory farming globally, yet animal welfare is not addressed in its public disclosures or policies. While Citi's ESG frameworks mention biodiversity in sensitive ecoregions, these references fail to account for the welfare of animals themselves. The proponent highlights that other financial institutions are integrating animal welfare criteria into lending decisions, and notes Citi scored "0" on Banksforanimals.org. They argue that without clear public acknowledgment of how animal welfare risks are evaluated, Citi risks being perceived as inattentive to a growing area of investor concern. The proposed report would improve transparency, governance, and reputational standing, aligning Citi with emerging best practice in ESG risk management.

Company's response: Citi recommends voting against the proposal, stating that its existing governance and risk management structures already provide adequate oversight of relevant risks, including those tied to biodiversity and wildlife. The company notes that its Environmental and Social Risk Management (ESRM) Policy addresses issues such as trade in endangered species and harmful fishing practices, and that risks related to flora and fauna are incorporated when material. Citi's

Enterprise Risk Management Framework, overseen by the Board, supports consistent risk identification and reporting. The company engages with clients across agriculture, biodiversity, and alternative proteins, citing a 2023 deal with The EVERY Company to support animal-free egg protein production. Citi adds that it monitors emerging risks and would integrate animal welfare into risk assessments if deemed material. It views the requested report as unnecessary given current oversight practices and the flexibility of its governance approach.

PIRC Recommendation: Citi's existing disclosures do not meaningfully address animal welfare risks, despite growing investor and societal scrutiny of its role in financing factory farming. While biodiversity and sustainability are covered in its frameworks, they are insufficiently detailed regarding the specific welfare conditions of animals and the reputational risks tied to such financing. The requested report would enhance transparency and accountability on a critical issue that is increasingly considered material by stakeholders. In light of peer action in this area and Citi's current lack of disclosure, support is recommended.

*4.. Shareholder Resolution: DEI Goals in Executive Pay IncentivesProponent Shareholder: National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The proponent, National Legal and Policy Center, calls on American Express to revisit and consider eliminating diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) goals from executive compensation programs. Citing the U.S. Supreme Court's 2023 decision in Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard, the proponent argues that the legal landscape has shifted significantly, with growing litigation risks associated with race based employment and contracting decisions. The proposal expresses concern that DEI metrics embedded within executive pay specifically within the "Colleague" component of the company's annual incentive awards may expose American Express to reputational, regulatory, and litigation risks. These risks are said to arise from perceived discriminatory practices that favor specific identity groups over others, such as increased spending with suppliers from "underrepresented" communities. The proposal criticises the subjective nature of these incentive goals and their alignment with non-GAAP metrics, raising concerns over SEC compliance. It also references public commentary and legal opinions warning against race- and gender focused initiatives in the corporate setting. The proponent urges the Compensation and Benefits Committee to re-evaluate and potentially remove DEI driven criteria from executive compensation to reduce risk exposure and maintain shareholder value.

Company's response: The company opposes the proposal, stating that it is unnecessary as diversity related performance metrics have already been removed from executive compensation. The Board highlights that its Compensation and Benefits Committee eliminated the "Diversity Representation" goal from the Company Scorecard in 2024 following the prior year's Say-on-Pay vote and governance feedback. The updated Scorecard increases the weighting of financial performance metrics and reduces the "Colleague" category to focus only on Talent Retention and Culture, assessed via the Annual Colleague Experience Survey. The Board asserts that the 2024 adjustments, which continue into 2025, address the concerns raised by the proposal, rendering it obsolete. Additionally, the Compensation and Benefits Committee already conducts annual reviews of the executive compensation structure to ensure alignment with legal standards, shareholder input, and strategic priorities. The company emphasises the Board's broad discretion in structuring compensation programs and assures compliance with SEC disclosure requirements. Thus, the proposal is deemed redundant and without added value to shareholders. The Board recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of staff diversity lie in widening the perspectives brought to bear on decision making, reducing groupthink, and enhancing the company's understanding of its workforce, customer base, supply chain, and broader societal context. Transparent reporting on workforce composition and progress against stated diversity goals enables shareholders to assess whether the company is fostering an inclusive culture aligned with long-term value creation. Policies and targets relating to diversity demonstrate a proactive approach to talent management and corporate governance. However, this resolution appears to serve as a spoiler tactic by a politically motivated group aiming to undermine corporate DEI initiatives. It frames diversity objectives within executive compensation as discriminatory and litigious, while overlooking evidence of the long-term strategic benefits of inclusion for employee engagement, innovation, and stakeholder trust. Its narrowly framed financial and legal concerns are weighted toward immediate compliance risks and short-term cost, rather than a balanced assessment of the broader business case for DEI. Moreover, the resolution seeks to micromanage compensation policy that the company has already adjusted in response to shareholder feedback, rendering the proposal unnecessary. Opposition is recommended.

*5.. Shareholder Resolution: Civil Liberties in Advertising ServicesProponent Shareholder: Thomas Rivers, c/o Bowyer Research, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proposal, introduced by Thomas Rivers through Bowyer Research, urges American Express to evaluate and report on risks associated with potential discrimination in its advertising services, particularly on the basis of political or religious viewpoints. The proponent argues that American Express participated in practices that could suppress lawful expression by collaborating with the Global Alliance for Responsible Media (GARM), an initiative under the World Federation of Advertisers, which the proponent alleges pushed for the demonetisation of media platforms over subjective criteria like "hate speech," "disinformation," and "insensitive" content. The proposal warns these vague standards could be exploited to stifle differing political and religious perspectives, with GARM cited for endorsing controversial entities like the Global Disinformation Index and NewsGuard. The proponent contends that such actions could expose the company to legal liabilities under antitrust and anti-discrimination laws and damage its reputation. The proposal requests a board level evaluation and public report on how the company oversees risks related to politically or religiously motivated discrimination in advertising decisions.

Company's Response: The Company opposes the proposal, stating that it does not engage in discriminatory practices against advertising buyers or sellers based on political or religious affiliations or views. American Express emphasises that its advertising decisions are guided by independently developed Media Brand Safety Guidelines and values based policies that prohibit bias or discrimination. The Board asserts that the company maintains strong commitments to fairness, integrity, and legal compliance, reinforced through its Code of Conduct and Ethics Hotline. The company supports fair competition and highlights its compliance with antitrust laws via its Antitrust Compliance Policy. The Audit and Compliance Committee already provides oversight of these areas, including compliance with laws, regulations, and internal policies. Therefore, the Board concludes that the requested report is unnecessary and would not benefit shareholders. The Board recommends voting AGAINST the proposal, citing existing safeguards, a lack of discriminatory policy or practice, and effective governance structures already in place.

PIRC analysis: While the safeguarding of civil liberties, including freedom of expression, is vital, this proposal appears to be ideologically driven and rooted in a broader political agenda rather than a genuine concern for transparent advertising governance. The resolution frames widely accepted industry efforts to reduce misinformation, hate speech, and discriminatory content as censorship, and targets collaborative initiatives such as the Global Alliance for Responsible Media, which was established to uphold brand safety and reduce reputational and regulatory risk across the advertising industry. Rather than seeking transparency or accountability in a neutral manner, the proposal characterises common content moderation standards as discriminatory against political or religious viewpoints despite no evidence being presented that American Express engages in such practices. Its framing aligns with a growing trend of right-wing shareholder activism that challenges corporate commitments to responsible digital advertising and content integrity under the guise of defending free speech. The company has affirmed that it does not engage in discrimination based on political or religious affiliation and has mechanisms in place such as its Code of Conduct and oversight by the Audit and Compliance Committee to ensure compliance with relevant laws and internal policies. The request for an additional report, particularly when framed in a partisan context that undermines efforts to counter misinformation and harmful content, does not present a constructive path forward. Opposition is recommended.

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, Chair of the Compensation Committee and Member of the Corporate Governance and Nominating Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. In terms of best practice, it is considered that both the Compensation Committee and the Corporate Governance and Nominating Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members.

It is considered that the Chair of the Compensation Committee is responsible for the company's executive compensation, and there are concerns with the company's executive compensation.

Furthermore, the chair holds another chair position at a listed company; Mr. Wolf has been the Executive Chair of EHealth, Inc. since September 2021. This raises time commitment concerns, and it is considered that the chair should be able to wholly dedicate their time to the company in times of company crisis. It is considered that there is insufficient time to be able to effectively chair two or more companies at the same time.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal, submitted by John Chevedden, calls on Molina Healthcare to amend its governing documents to allow shareholders owning a combined 10% of the company's outstanding common stock or the lowest threshold permitted by state law to call a special shareholder meeting. The proponent argues this change is essential to ensure meaningful shareholder engagement and to enhance the Board's accountability. With the ability to convene special meetings, shareholders would gain a "Plan B" mechanism to address board complacency, encourage strategic responsiveness, and foster improved director performance, particularly in light of growing board exculpation measures that may weaken fiduciary accountability. The proposal emphasises that traditional shareholder communication channels are often inadequate, equating them to sending a letter to the CEO. It also notes that technological advancements, such as virtual meetings, reduce logistical burdens for convening special meetings, reinforcing the argument that corporate bylaws should reflect these evolving norms. The proposal concludes that enhancing shareholder rights to initiate special meetings strengthens corporate democracy and urges a "yes" vote.

Company's Response: Molina Healthcare's Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that it is unnecessary and not in shareholders' best interests. The company emphasises its ongoing commitment to strong corporate governance and stockholder engagement, including proxy access, board refreshment practices, independent directors, and open communication channels. The Board argues that these existing mechanisms already provide ample opportunities for shareholder input and accountability. Moreover, the company warns that allowing shareholders with 10% of shares to call special meetings could empower a small group to pursue special interest agendas, potentially leading to corporate disruption, increased costs, and short-term pressures misaligned with long-term goals. The Board maintains that special meetings should be reserved for extraordinary circumstances and that existing provisions where the CEO, chairman, or Board can call such meetings are sufficient. Citing market practice, the company notes that only 18% of S&P 500 companies permit special meetings at the 10% threshold. Therefore, the Board concludes that the proposal is inconsistent with best practice, potentially costly, and redundant in light of current governance structures.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Amendment to Clawback Policy on Unearned Incentive Pay

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that the Company amend its existing clawback policy to strengthen accountability regarding unearned executive compensation. Specifically, it seeks to ensure that the policy applies to all Named Executive Officers (NEOs), and that not only misconduct, but also conduct or negligence, should trigger mandatory recoupment. The proponent also asks for greater transparency, recommending that the Board provide shareholders with an annual report on deliberations and outcomes related to the clawback policy, particularly when the decision is made not to pursue recovery. The proposal highlights examples from other companies-most notably Wells Fargo-as cases where weak clawback enforcement allowed executives to retain compensation despite presiding over serious failures. The proponent warns that without stronger policies, current structures may allow executives to be rewarded despite negligence, undermining incentives for ethical and effective leadership. The proposal does not seek to introduce punitive or vague measures but aims to align pay outcomes with company performance and ethical accountability. The shareholder argues that a more robust policy would support investor confidence and enhance long-term governance.

Company's Response : The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that PulteGroup already has comprehensive clawback mechanisms in place that exceed regulatory requirements. The company has adopted a mandatory Dodd-Frank Clawback Policy that enables the recovery of erroneously awarded incentive-based compensation from current and former executive officers in cases of financial restatement, regardless of misconduct. In addition, PulteGroup maintains a discretionary clawback policy applicable to a broader group of employees, including all executive officers, which addresses "detrimental conduct." The Board argues that mandatory application based on "conduct or negligence" would unduly restrict the Compensation and Management Development Committee's discretion, potentially resulting in unfair or counterproductive outcomes. Furthermore, the company believes that current SEC disclosure obligations already provide adequate transparency and that further mandated reporting-particularly regarding Board deliberations-could lead to misleading interpretations of actions taken. The Board concludes that its dual-policy approach offers a flexible and effective balance between governance, fairness, and enforceability. Accordingly, shareholders are advised to vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: While PulteGroup currently maintains both a mandatory Dodd-Frank clawback policy and a discretionary policy covering "detrimental conduct," this proposal calls for the adoption of more robust and transparent standards regarding the recoupment of unearned executive pay. Specifically, it seeks to extend the scope to include not only misconduct, but also negligence or other harmful conduct, and to ensure consistent application to all Named Executive Officers. It further introduces a valuable transparency element by requiring the Board to report its rationale for any decision not to pursue clawback actions. Although the company argues that its existing policies already go beyond regulatory requirements, these are largely discretionary in nature and do not clearly mandate recoupment in the event of negligence. Moreover, the company's opposition to reporting on deliberations raises concerns about accountability and shareholder visibility into how the policy is enforced. Strengthening clawback provisions to prevent reward in the face of negligence or failure is consistent with evolving governance expectations and with recent trends in executive pay alignment and risk mitigation. On this basis, the proposal represents a meaningful improvement in corporate governance. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Paris-aligned Emission Reduction Goals

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow on behalf of Laird Norton Family Foundation

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges PulteGroup to adopt greenhouse gas emission reduction targets aligned with the Paris Agreement, which aims to limit global temperature rise to 1.5°C. The proponent highlights the increasing regulatory focus on building-related emissions, particularly at the municipal and state levels, in several of the states where PulteGroup operates. It notes that peers such as Thrive Home Builders and Meritage Homes have adopted more ambitious energy standards, including net-zero ready homes and ENERGY STAR certifications, putting PulteGroup at risk of falling behind both from a regulatory and competitive standpoint. The proposal critiques PulteGroup's current standard-ensuring homes are "capable of qualifying" for ENERGY STAR 3.1-as insufficient, given that this benchmark is already outdated in some jurisdictions and exceeded by competitors. It points to customer demand for energy-efficient and affordable homes, and growing government incentives-such as the Inflation Reduction Act-as reinforcing the business case for forward-looking transition planning. Adopting Paris-aligned goals would help mitigate regulatory and reputational risks, ensure the company remains competitive in a low-carbon economy, and provide investors with confidence that the company is prepared for long-term climate resilience.

Company's Response: The Board recommends a vote against the proposal, stating that PulteGroup is already addressing climate-related issues through its operational practices, transparency efforts, and energy-efficient building strategies. The company reports Scope 1, 2, and 3 emissions annually and has voluntarily adopted many recommendations of the Task Force on Climate-related Financial Disclosures (TCFD). PulteGroup emphasises that its current initiatives-such as its goal for all new homes started in 2025 to qualify for ENERGY STAR 3.1 certification, partnerships with utilities, installation of solar systems and battery storage, and participation in Zero-Energy Ready communities-demonstrate meaningful progress toward sustainability. The Board believes that setting formal Paris-aligned targets is unnecessary at this stage and may not be well-suited to PulteGroup's national scale and diverse operations. It also argues that customer demand has not signaled concern over the absence of formal net-zero goals and that its homes already incorporate features that deliver energy efficiency and cost savings. In the Board's view, the proposal adds little value beyond what is already being achieved and reported, and it advises shareholders to vote against it.

PIRC analysis: The proposal seeks to align PulteGroup's emission reduction strategy with the global 1.5°C climate objective, reflecting a growing investor expectation for science-based targets and credible transition planning. While the company has taken steps forward in improving its environmental disclosure-such as reporting Scope 1, 2, and 3 emissions, and adopting aspects of the TCFD framework-these efforts stop short of a clear commitment to absolute emission reductions across the value chain. The absence of Paris-aligned targets and a concrete timeline creates a gap in understanding how the company is addressing both regulatory risks and evolving customer preferences in a carbon-constrained world. This proposal is advisory and respects the board's discretion to determine the appropriate path forward. It does not seek to undermine current efforts but to complement them by adding strategic clarity. Given that competitors have already adopted stronger energy efficiency standards and that local regulations in several operating states are tightening, it is in the long-term interest of shareholders that PulteGroup provide a roadmap consistent with a low-carbon economy. A more ambitious transition plan would support investor confidence, help manage material risk, and maintain competitiveness amid shifting regulatory and market expectations. Support is recommended.

ESSILORLUXOTTICA SA AGM - 30-04-2025

5. Approve the Remuneration Report of Executive Corporate Officers

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration of executive corporate officers. There are concerns regarding excess as the total variable remuneration exceeded 200% of the salary. The Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. There are claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is welcomed. However, opposition is recommended based on excessive remuneration.

The Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets for performance criteria for its variable remuneration component, which may lead to overpayment against underperformance. WYNN RESORTS LIMITED AGM - 30-04-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Smokefree Policy

Proponent Shareholder: Trinity Health

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Trinity Health, requests that Wynn Resorts commission and disclose a report assessing potential cost savings from adopting a smokefree policy at its properties. The proposal emphasises the health hazards of secondhand smoke, citing the U.S. Surgeon General's findings and asserting that current ventilation systems cannot mitigate these risks adequately. It highlights disproportionate health impacts on vulnerable worker groups such as women and people of color and references C3 Gaming's research indicating that smokefree casinos may outperform smoking-permitted ones in revenue generation. The proponent also notes potential financial liabilities of continuing indoor smoking, including higher employee health insurance premiums, increased maintenance costs, and the loss of customers deterred by smoke exposure. They underscore that other casinos, like Parx and Foxwoods, have implemented smokefree policies successfully, observing improved employee morale and cost benefits. The proposal calls for greater transparency on social and environmental costs associated with indoor smoking and contends that the report would align Wynn with emerging customer preferences and strengthen its safety initiatives.

Company's Response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it is not in the best interests of Wynn Resorts or its shareholders.

The Company claims its current smoking policies already incorporate a broad assessment of guest preferences, competitive practices, local regulations, and other relevant business factors. It emphasises compliance with all applicable laws and notes specific actions taken at its Las Vegas property, including restricting smoking to designated areas and implementing advanced air ventilation systems. The Company argues that it continually evaluates smoking-related business considerations and sees no added value in conducting the requested report. According to the Board, producing such a report would be an inefficient use of company time and resources. They maintain that current practices sufficiently balance the needs of stakeholders and market demands, implying that additional reporting would not materially enhance decision-making or shareholder value.

PIRC analysis: The proposal calls for transparency on the potential cost savings associated with implementing a smokefree policy at Wynn Resorts properties. It is rooted in concerns over public health, employee well-being, and changing customer preferences. The company's response focuses on existing compliance and internal evaluations but avoids directly addressing the proposal's central concern: the need for a transparent, data-driven assessment of the economic and social trade-offs of indoor smoking. In the context of rising demand for healthier environments and the declining prevalence of smoking, a detailed report could help the company align with emerging health and ESG expectations while enhancing its risk management and stakeholder communication. Moreover, evidence cited by the proponent suggests that smokefree policies may not negatively impact-and may even improve-revenue and employee outcomes. Adopting such a measure could strengthen the company's public health profile and sustainability credentials. Support is recommended.

NEWMONT CORPORATION AGM - 30-04-2025

1.1. Elect Gregory H. Boyce - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, Chair of the Corporate Governance and Nominating Committee and member of the Leadership Development and Compensation Committee. The Chair is not considered independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this.

In terms of best practice, it is considered that the Corporate Governance and Nominating and Leadership Development and Compensation Committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the chair of Corporate Governance and Nominating Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, withhold vote is recommended.

4. Shareholder Resolution: Assessment of Non-Sugar Sweeteners

Proponent Shareholder: CommonSpirit Health, with co-filers including the Benedictine Sisters of Mount St. Scholastica, the Congregation of Benedictine Sisters (San Antonio, TX), and the Missionary Oblates of Mary Immaculate, United States Province

Proponent's argument: The proponents request that Coca-Cola commission a third-party assessment examining the company's efforts to evaluate and mitigate potential health harms linked to the use of non-sugar sweeteners (NSS) in its products. They argue that Coca-Cola's heavy reliance on NSS raises serious concerns, particularly given recent public health research and global regulatory scrutiny. Studies cited link NSS to increased risks of cancer, cardiovascular disease, insulin resistance, and neurological issues. Despite Coca-Cola's assurance that NSS are approved by food safety regulators, the proponents stress that many such approvals are outdated and may not reflect the latest science. With 19 of Coca-Cola's top 20 brands containing NSS, and targeted marketing to vulnerable groups such as youth and communities of colour, the proponents argue that a thorough, impartial review is warranted. The proposed report should clarify how Coca-Cola determines NSS safety, the experts and institutions it relies upon, and its relationships with researchers or bodies shaping guidance on NSS. Transparency on this issue is vital for public trust and risk mitigation.

Company's response: Coca-Cola recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that a third-party assessment would be redundant given the robust body of scientific research and regulatory approvals already affirming the safety of NSS. The company states that ingredients like aspartame and Ace-K have been extensively reviewed by over 90 food safety authorities, including the FDA, EFSA, and JECFA, all of which continue to consider them safe for human consumption at current levels. Coca-Cola highlights that sugar alternatives play a role in public health strategies, including for people managing diabetes, and contribute to more sustainable food systems. The company also points to its broader sugar reduction efforts, such as recipe reformulations, promotion of low- and no-calorie beverages, and smaller portion sizes. It asserts that further reporting would not add value and that its approach to ingredient safety is firmly grounded in global regulatory standards and scientific consensus.

PIRC Recommendation: While Coca-Cola points to widespread regulatory approval of NSS, there is growing concern that these reviews do not fully reflect emerging independent research on long-term health impacts. The company's high reliance on NSS, combined with aggressive marketing towards vulnerable populations, underscores the need for enhanced transparency. A third-party assessment would not duplicate existing oversight but instead strengthen stakeholder confidence by disclosing how Coca-Cola evaluates health risks, manages scientific affiliations, and supports impartial research. Given the material health and reputational risks associated with NSS and the evolving regulatory environment, support is recommended.

5. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Food Waste

Proponent Shareholder: The Accountability Board, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls on Coca-Cola to publish a report identifying types and quantities of food and beverage waste across its global operations, including disposal methods, and to set measurable, timebound targets for reducing such waste. While Coca-Cola's sustainability reporting extensively addresses packaging waste, it remains silent on food waste-particularly notable given its ownership of Costa Coffee, which operates thousands of cafés and self-serve bars. The proponent highlights the environmental, social, and financial implications of food waste, citing evidence that addressing food waste offers significant returns on investment. Despite Costa's public statements about tracking and reducing food waste, no specific data or interim targets have been disclosed. In contrast, Starbucks has already published detailed waste metrics and aims to halve food waste by 2030. The proposal aligns with growing investor and regulatory focus on the issue, and seeks to improve Coca-Cola's accountability, efficiency, and impact through greater transparency and goal-setting.

Company's response: Coca-Cola recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that its operations generate minimal food waste due to the nature of its product portfolio, which mainly comprises shelf-stable beverages. While acknowledging the relevance of the issue to Costa Coffee, Coca-Cola states that food waste in Costa's UK stores is already tracked internally and reduced through various initiatives, including optimised product ranges, surplus food redistribution, and use of waste-to-energy solutions. Costa reportedly rescued over 800,000 bags of food in 2023 through partnerships. The company maintains that it prioritises sustainability efforts around water, packaging, and climate-areas where it believes it can have the most significant impact. Coca-Cola argues that issuing a separate report on food waste would be duplicative and an inefficient use of resources, and therefore unnecessary.

PIRC Recommendation: While Coca-Cola outlines some efforts to reduce waste at Costa, the absence of publicly disclosed data and targets limits stakeholders' ability to evaluate progress. The increasing regulatory and investor attention to food waste underscores the importance of transparent, measurable action. Coca-Cola lags behind peers such as Starbucks in this area, and adopting this proposal would strengthen its environmental accountability and risk management. Given the material and reputational risks associated with waste and the clear benefits of enhanced disclosure, support is recommended.

6. Shareholder Resolution: Creation of an Improper Influence Board Committee

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls for the creation of a board-level "Improper Influence Committee" to assess whether non-pecuniary policy preferences—such as those related to ESG, DEI, and corporate social responsibility—have improperly influenced Coca-Cola's decision-making. The proposal suggests that such influence, whether from directors, executives, or asset managers, undermines shareholder value. It claims that Coca-Cola's sustainability and inclusion strategies align with partisan ideologies and could expose the company to reputational and financial harm, as allegedly seen in public backlashes against other brands. The proponent questions the rationale behind Coca-Cola's climate goals, DEI commitments, and top score on the Human Rights Campaign's Corporate Equality Index, arguing these initiatives lack clear financial justification. They argue that establishing the proposed committee and issuing a public report would enhance board oversight and ensure corporate decisions remain focused on long-term shareholder value rather than activist-driven agendas.

Company's response: Coca-Cola's Board opposes the proposal, asserting that it is unnecessary and misaligned with sound governance principles. The Board states that its current committee structure already provides effective oversight of corporate strategy and risk. Committees are formed based on strategic priorities and material risks, not in response to isolated stakeholder concerns. The company rejects the characterisation of its ESG and DEI efforts as "value destroying," emphasising that such initiatives are integrated into its broader business strategy to promote sustainable growth and stakeholder engagement. The Board also questions the practicality and purpose of forming a committee to examine "improper influence," given the vague and subjective nature of the proposal. It concludes that the measure would not contribute meaningful oversight or shareholder value and recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC Recommendation: The proposal presents a politicised and ideologically motivated critique of ESG and DEI practices, rather than a serious governance concern. Coca-Cola's board and committee structure already allows for robust oversight of corporate strategy and risk. There is no credible evidence that the company's decision-making has been improperly influenced in a way that compromises shareholder value. Moreover, creating a dedicated committee based on a loosely defined concept of "improper influence" would divert resources and serve no clear governance benefit. The proposal risks undermining board independence and company discretion in strategic planning. Opposition is recommended.

7. Shareholder Resolution: Removing DEI Goals in Executive Pay

Proponent Shareholder: National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Coca-Cola's Talent and Compensation Committee revisit its executive incentive pay guidelines, specifically to consider removing diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) goals. The proposal frames DEI-linked pay metrics as potentially unlawful and high risk following the 2023 US Supreme Court ruling on affirmative action, asserting that DEI programmes expose companies to legal, reputational, and financial liabilities. It highlights rising litigation against corporate DEI practices and claims that incentive structures tied to DEI objectives could violate employment laws or breach fiduciary duties. Coca-Cola's current pay policies include DEI-linked performance measures, such as aligning its workforce with U.S. Census demographics by 2030 and aiming for gender parity in leadership. The proponent argues these targets are discriminatory and should be reconsidered, citing broader backlash against DEI in corporate America and recent legal rulings involving other companies. The resolution seeks only that the board "revisit" and "consider" adjustments, positioning it as a measured, compliance-focused step.

Company's response: Coca-Cola opposes the proposal, stating it is unnecessary and redundant. The Board affirms that its Talent and Compensation Committee already annually reviews and evaluates all components of executive pay, including both financial and non-financial performance measures. This includes regular assessments of DEI-related incentives, conducted with input from independent advisors. The Committee reviewed these factors most recently in February 2025 and determined to continue including DEI goals as part of long- and short-term incentive structures. Coca-Cola's compensation design aims to align executive rewards with long-term value creation and cultural objectives, including sustainability and inclusion. The Board views these DEI-related measures as non-quota-based and fully within its strategic discretion. It argues that the proposal requests no action beyond what is already routine practice and therefore has effectively been implemented. As such, it recommends shareholders vote against the resolution.

PIRC Recommendation: It is rooted in ideological opposition to DEI principles and does not present a credible governance concern. The inclusion of DEI metrics in executive compensation is a recognised practice that reflects long-term value considerations, stakeholder priorities, and cultural alignment. Coca-Cola's DEI targets are aspirational and reviewed annually by its Compensation Committee, which retains full discretion over incentive design. The proposal mischaracterises these efforts as unlawful or financially irresponsible without evidentiary support. Eliminating or revisiting DEI goals on ideological grounds would undermine the company's strategic commitments and responsiveness to evolving workforce and consumer expectations. Opposition is recommended.

8. Shareholder Resolution: Brand Image Impacts

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow, on behalf of the Michael E. Monteiro 2016 Rev Trust.

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls on Coca-Cola to publish a report assessing the reputational and business risks of associating its brand with politically divisive events, following the company's sponsorship of a 2024 conference featuring controversial speaker Chris Rufo. The resolution highlights investor concern over brand alignment, noting that Coca-Cola's public commitments to diversity, equity, and inclusion conflict with the views of certain event participants. The proponent argues that Coca-Cola's sponsorship contradicts its stated values and has led to negative media coverage and public backlash, potentially damaging consumer trust, employee morale, and long-term brand equity. The requested report would examine such impacts and suggest potential policies to prevent misalignment in future sponsorships. By outlining risks and possible mitigation strategies, the proposal aims to protect shareholder value and ensure reputational consistency across Coca-Cola's activities.

Company's response: Coca-Cola opposes the proposal, arguing that the requested report is unnecessary and unjustified. The company explains that its involvement in public policy events and organisations provides access to influential platforms and decision-makers, and does not imply endorsement of all views expressed at such events. The company maintains that its sponsorship of the Canada Strong and Free conference was consistent with its approach of engaging across the political spectrum and that exposure to differing viewpoints promotes constructive dialogue. Coca-Cola emphasises that the event in question featured more than 20 speakers, including high-profile political figures from Canada and other countries, and that the controversy centres around one individual speaker. The company believes withdrawing support from sponsored events based on selective disagreement could be seen as inconsistent and may risk brand credibility among stakeholders who value open debate. Therefore, Coca-Cola considers the proposal a poor use of resources and recommends shareholders vote against it.

PIRC Recommendation: While companies have the right to engage in public discourse, sponsorship decisions must align with stated values to maintain brand integrity and stakeholder trust. Coca-Cola's prominent support of a politically charged event that featured speakers with widely criticised views creates reputational risk, especially given its high-profile commitments to diversity and inclusion. The lack of internal safeguards to assess such misalignments raises concerns about oversight. A report analysing the potential impact on brand image and offering guidance for future sponsorship decisions would improve governance, mitigate reputational exposure, and reassure stakeholders. Support is recommended.

9. Shareholder Resolution: Civil Liberties in Advertising Services

Proponent Shareholder: Bowyer Research, Inc., on behalf of a shareowner

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Coca-Cola publish a report evaluating how it manages risks related to alleged discrimination in advertising practices based on political or religious viewpoints. The proposal centres on Coca-Cola's past association with the Global Alliance for Responsible Media (GARM), which the proponent claims enabled censorship by promoting brand safety standards that excluded certain political or religious content. It argues that Coca-Cola's involvement in such industry collaborations may have contributed to advertising restrictions against conservative media outlets, podcasts, or online platforms, thus creating reputational and legal risks under antitrust and anti-discrimination law. The proposal cites concerns about vague definitions of "disinformation" and "hate speech" used to demonetise content, and highlights GARM's disbanding in 2024 amid public pressure and a lawsuit. The resolution claims that Coca-Cola's credibility, legal exposure, and stakeholder trust may suffer without transparency around how it chooses advertising platforms or manages viewpoint neutrality.

Company's response: Coca-Cola's Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that it rejects the premise on which the resolution is based. The company affirms that advertising platform choices are guided by business objectives, not dictated by external organisations such as GARM. Coca-Cola emphasises that it adheres to globally recognised responsible marketing frameworks and independently determines its advertising strategy, taking into account factors such as budget, brand safety, and effectiveness. The company denies engaging in discriminatory or politically motivated ad-buying practices and asserts that decisions about advertising placement are a core operational function, not appropriate for shareholder micromanagement. It argues that the requested report would serve no useful purpose and would divert resources from core strategic priorities.

PIRC Recommendation: The proposal is ideologically driven and misrepresents industry-standard brand safety practices as discriminatory censorship. Coca-Cola's responsible marketing aligns with global frameworks that seek to prevent harm, disinformation, and hate speech, which are consistent with ESG-aligned governance. The proposal undermines these principles by framing content moderation and advertising discretion as violations of civil liberties. Furthermore, there is no credible evidence that Coca-Cola discriminates in its advertising activities on the basis of political or religious views. The company's decisions in this area are commercial in nature and subject to existing oversight. Producing a report based on politically motivated claims would not enhance governance or shareholder value. Opposition is recommended.

MARATHON PETROLEUM CORPORATION AGM - 30-04-2025

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Simple Majority Voting

Proponent's argument: Shareholder request that the board take each step necessary so that each voting requirement in our charter and bylaws (that is explicit or implicit due to default to state law) that calls for a greater than simple majority vote be replaced by a requirement for a majority of the votes cast for and against applicable proposals, or a simple majority in compliance with applicable laws. Shareholders argue the following: "Shareholders are willing to pay a premium for shares of companies that have excellent corporate governance. MPC's supermajority voting requirements have been found to be one of 6 entrenching mechanisms that are negatively related to company performance according to "What Matters in Corporate Governance" by Lucien Bebchuk, Alma Cohen and Allen Ferrell of the Harvard Law School. Supermajority requirements can be used to block proposals supported by most shareholder but opposed by management".

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "As a large public company with many individual shareholders, we annually incur over $1 million for printing and mailing proxy materials, voting solicitation and tabulation, virtual meeting hosting and other related expenses in connection with our annual meeting of shareholders. In addition, we have in various years incurred additional costs focused on encouraging shareholders to vote in favor of the Board's supermajority elimination proposal. We have engaged various proxy solicitors to assess our shareholder base and help us strategize on various paths to obtain the 80% threshold needed to approve the Board's supermajority elimination proposal. As shown in the table above, however, these actions and additional expense have not resulted in the necessary vote turnout. In consultation with our proxy solicitor, we will continue to monitor our shareholder base and annual meeting voting results to determine when and if additional actions and expenditures to encourage shareholder voting could positively impact the voting result on this proposal".

PIRC analysis: It is considered to be best practice that shareholders should have the right to approve most matters submitted for their consideration by a simple majority of the shares voted. There are concerns that the supermajority provisions which relate to the company's corporate governance documents could frustrate attempts by the majority of shareholders to make the company more accountable or strengthen the independence of the Board. Support is therefore recommended.

4. Amend Certificate of Incorporation

It is proposed that the Restated Certificate of Incorporation of Juniper, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation]. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

Non-Executive Chair of the Board. The Chair is not considered independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. In addition, the Director has beneficial ownership of a significant share of the Company's stock. It should be noted that Dr Afeyan is the CEO of Flagship pioneering where Mr Berenson is the the Managing Partner. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Oppose vote is therefore recommended.

15. Shareholder Proposal: Elect Philip Hobbs, a Shareholder Nominee, as a Director

Proponent's argument: Resolution 15 is a shareholder proposal submitted by Ms. Valerie McCabe on 2 March 2025, seeking the appointment of Mr. Philip John Hobbs as a Director at the upcoming AGM. The company has not disclosed a formal supporting statement or justification from Ms. McCabe within the notice. The only statement related to the shareholder proposal is: "On 2 March 2025, the Company received notice from a Shareholder, Ms. Valerie McCabe of her intention to propose a resolution for the appointment of Mr. Philip John Hobbs as a Director at this AGM."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Board has not been given sufficient time or information to evaluate Mr Hobbs by reference to the criteria set out above. In any event, the Board is satisfied that the existing non-executive Directors, each of whom is proposed for re-election at the AGM, have the relevant mix of skills, competence and capability required under the applicable regulatory requirements. Accordingly, the Board has concluded that the appointment of Mr Hobbs as a Director is not in the best interests of the Company or its Shareholders. The Board further notes, that even if approved by Shareholders, the appointment of Mr Hobbs would remain subject to, and could only become effective after, receipt of all required regulatory approvals and consultation with the Minister. There can be no certainty that any such approvals would be received."

PIRC Recommendation: The Board has outlined a comprehensive, formalised process for director appointments, involving skills-based assessment, regulatory review, and ministerial consultation. It has stated that it lacked sufficient time and information to properly evaluate Mr. Hobbs and has confidence in the current composition of the Board. Given the absence of a proponent's supporting statement and the lack of biographical information for such an appointment, the proposal does not meet the necessary threshold for support at this time.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges the Eversource Energy Board to implement a policy requiring the separation of the roles of Chairman and CEO, ensuring that the Chairman be an independent director. The proponent argues that combining these roles, as is currently the case with Joseph R. Nolan, Jr. serving in both capacities since 2022, undermines effective oversight, particularly in light of the company's underwhelming long-term stock performance. Eversource's stock reportedly declined from $92 in 2019 to $61 in late 2024, despite a strong broader market, and 14% of shareholders voted against executive compensation in 2024, above the usual 5% dissent rate at well performing firms. The proponent sees these signals as evidence that the current leadership structure is failing shareholders. The proposal stresses the importance of board independence, especially during critical periods such as CEO succession planning, and suggests phasing in the policy upon CEO transition or contract renewal. It emphasises that having a fully independent chairman is a well regarded governance best practice and a key measure for accountability. The overall aim is to reinforce diligent succession planning, governance quality, and shareholder alignment through structural reform.

Company's Response : Eversource's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it limits necessary flexibility in determining the optimal board leadership structure for the company at any given time. The Board argues that a "one-size-fits-all" mandate for an independent chairman is not in shareholders' best interests. The company emphasises its strong governance practices, highlighting that all Board members, except the Chairman/CEO are independent, and all committees are fully composed of independent trustees. Eversource maintains that its current model, where Chairman and CEO roles are combined and complemented by a robust Lead Independent Trustee, provides an effective balance of unified leadership and independent oversight. The Board asserts that this structure allows efficient strategic execution, such as the recent divestiture of offshore wind and pending sale of Aquarion water companies, both of which aim to strengthen the company's financial positioning. Furthermore, shareholder engagement indicated no strong preference for an independent chair, especially given the current governance setup. The Lead Independent Trustee role, currently held by Daniel J. Nova, is described as comprehensive and effective. Ultimately, the Board argues the proposal is unnecessary due to the current governance model's strength and responsiveness, and that mandating separation of roles could constrain its ability to appoint the most appropriate leadership in future circumstances.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Support an Independent Board Chairman

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the Board of Directors adopt an enduring policy, and amend the governing documents as necessary in order that 2 separate people hold the office of the Chairman and the office of the CEO. Shareholders argue the following: "The Board has the discretion to select a Temporary Chairman of the Board who is not an Independent Director to serve while the Board is seeking an Independent Chairman of the Board on an expedited basis. It is a best practice to adopt this policy soon. However this policy could be phased in when there is a contract renewal for our current CEO or for the next CEO transition. The roles of Chairman and CEO are fundamentally different and should be held by 2 directors, a CEO and a Chairman who is completely independent of the CEO and our company."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Board believes it is best positioned to determine the appropriate leadership structure based on the Company's specific circumstances, including its short- and long-term strategic priorities and business environment. This flexibility is paramount to ensuring the Board can implement a leadership structure that enables highly-effective governance oversight. Currently, the Board believes that combining the roles of Chair and CEO helps ensure that the CEO, with his extensive knowledge of Eastman and full-time focus on the business affairs of the Company, can effectively and efficiently manage implementation of the Board's recommendations and decisions. The Board believes that a policy mandating an independent Chair would undermine the flexibility required to determine the most effective leadership structure for Eastman at any given time. [...] In addition to the governance framework outlined above, all of the Board's non-executive directors, which includes all directors other than the CEO, are independent directors who have no material relationships with the Company, its executives, or its subsidiaries. In addition, each of the Board's committees are comprised solely of independent directors and are 100% independent. Directors are elected annually and, as described above, the Company has an independent Lead Director with clear and substantive authority and responsibilities."

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. 4.. Shareholder Resolution: Special Shareholder Meeting Improvement

Proponent's argument: John Chevedden submitted a proposal urging Church & Dwight to improve shareholder rights by removing the one-year continuous ownership requirement from its provision on calling special shareholder meetings. Currently, only shareholders who have held at least 25% of outstanding shares for one continuous year can initiate such a meeting. The proponent argues this renders the existing right ineffective, especially in urgent situations. He highlights that shareholders may need to act swiftly during crises or company underperformance, and the one-year holding condition obstructs timely action. The proposal suggests that removing this restriction would enable responsive engagement, incentivise management to avoid governance failures, and reinforce accountability, as directors could be replaced through such meetings. Chevedden also stresses that strong turnaround strategies may come from new shareholders who would otherwise be excluded. He concludes that the holding period undermines the very purpose of shareholder meetings in emergencies and calls for a revision to make the right meaningful and functional.

Company's Response : Church & Dwight's Board recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that the existing special meeting rights are well balanced and consistent with market best practices. The company explains that it adopted its current structure in 2020, allowing shareholders owning at least 25% of stock for one continuous year to call a special meeting. This requirement, according to the Board, ensures that only long-term, committed shareholders can exercise this significant governance right. The company emphasises that special meetings should be rare, addressing only extraordinary issues, as they incur substantial financial and administrative costs and distract from long-term value creation. The Board also warns that eliminating the one-year holding period could invite misuse by short-term or special interest groups, potentially harming broader shareholder value. Additionally, the company outlines existing governance protections, including annual director elections, proxy access, no poison pill, and regular shareholder engagement. These, it argues, provide robust shareholder rights without exposing the company to undue disruption. Therefore, the Board maintains that the current structure offers appropriate safeguards while ensuring accountability.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting is a fundamental governance tool that strengthens shareholder rights by providing a mechanism for direct engagement on urgent or significant issues. This proposal does not seek to alter the 25% ownership threshold but instead focuses on removing the current requirement that shareholders must have held their shares continuously for one year in order to qualify. The existing holding period restriction may unnecessarily limit the pool of eligible shareholders and reduce the practical effectiveness of the special meeting right, especially in time sensitive situations. By enabling more shareholders-including newer investors-to participate in this governance mechanism, the proposal would enhance accountability and responsiveness. The potential for short-term abuse must be weighed against the benefits of timely shareholder action, particularly given the checks already in place through procedural and ownership thresholds. Overall, the proposal is considered a reasonable enhancement to existing rights. Support is recommended.

Independent Non-Executive Chair of the Board. The chair holds another chair position at a listed company, which raises time commitment concerns. It is considered that the chair should be able to wholly dedicate their time to the company in times of company crisis. The COVID pandemic has shown that there are times when multiple unrelated companies will require the Chair's full attention in order to be able to handle times of crisis. It is considered that there is insufficient time to be able to effectively chair two or more companies at the same time. Furthermore, as the Company do not have a Board level Sustainability Committee, the Chair of the Board is considered accountable for the Company's sustainability programme. As the Company's sustainability policies and practice are not considered adequate to minimise the material risks linked to sustainability.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. 5. Shareholder Resolution: Executive Compensation

Proponent's argument: Stockholders recommend that Intuitive Surgical, Inc. improve the executive compensation program to include the CEO pay ratio factor. Shareholders argue the following: "The American corporate boards and executives have become a class of oligarchy, as defined by Aristotle, according to his Politics. In this great classic, Aristotle demonstrated that in a stable community (polis), the ratio of the rich citizen's land to the poor citizen's land should not be over 5 to 1. Our Company's CEO pay ratio was 111: 1 in 2023 (Notice of the 2024 Annual Meeting of Stockholders and Proxy Statement p.59), jumped from 81:1 in 2022 (Notice of the 2023 Annual Meeting of Stockholders and Proxy Statement p.60). This is against the trend: shareholders in JPMorgan Chase & Co., Intel, Netflix, Salesforce and other big companies rejected sky-high executive pay packages in 2022, 2023, and 2024. [...] The Company has the flexibility to reform the Compensation Committee to improve the executive compensation program, such as to include the CEO pay ratio factor."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The Board argues the following: "The Company's executive compensation program is designed to attract and retain a passionate team of executives who drive innovation that enables physicians and healthcare providers to improve the quality of, and access to, minimally invasive care for the patients they serve. Our strategy has been to provide a level of fairness within and across our programs to drive alignment of all employees, including our NEOs. This approach recognizes that, as a company, we are all one team with one mission. We believe our executive compensation program effectively aligns the interests of our executive officers with our company mission and our objective of creating sustainable long-term value for our stockholders. [...] Although SEC executive compensation disclosure rules require annual disclosure of the CEO pay ratio, our Compensation Committee does not believe that the CEO pay ratio should define or drive our compensation principles or practices. CEO pay ratios vary widely across companies, as different companies have different employment and compensation practices, depending on the nature of their workforce, their business, geographic locations, and various other factors. According to the SEC, the purpose of the CEO pay ratio disclosures is not to facilitate comparisons among companies. Further, conformity or comparability of pay ratios across companies is not necessarily achievable given the variety of factors that could cause ratios to differ, as companies may utilize different methodologies, exclusions, estimates, and assumptions in calculating their pay ratios. As a result, the utility of the CEO pay ratio as a comparative metric at the Company, industry-wide, or across industries is limited."

PIRC analysis: The disclosure of the pay ratio between the pay of the CEO or the NEOs and that of the median employee, is mandatory in the US under SEC rules

(and applies to US-listed companies such as this) and in several other major Western economies and is considered not only to be best practice but also to provide useful information to shareholders to help guide their approval or disapproval of the executive compensation programmes at a company. Several companies have disclosed the figure voluntarily without any damage to their ability to recruit and incentivise senior level employees. Support for the resolution is recommended.

6. Shareholder Resolution: Requirement for Excessive Golden Parachutes

Proponent's argument Shareholders request that the Board seek shareholder approval of any senior manager's new or renewed pay package that provides for severance or termination payments with an estimated value exceeding 2.99 times the sum of the executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. Shareholders argue the following: "This proposal is relevant even if there are current golden parachute limits. A limit on golden parachutes is like a speed limit. A speed limit by itself does not guarantee that the speed limit will never be exceeded. Like this proposal the rules associated with a speed limit provide consequences if the limit is exceeded. With this proposal the consequences are a non-binding shareholder vote is required for unreasonably rich golden parachutes. This proposal places no limit on long-term equity pay or any other type pay. This proposal thus has no impact on the ability to attract executive talent and does not discourage the use of long-term equity pay because it places no limit on golden parachutes. It simply requires that overly rich golden parachutes be subject to a non-binding shareholder vote at a shareholder meeting already scheduled for other matters. This proposal is relevant because the annual say on executive pay vote does not have a separate section for approving or rejecting golden parachutes."

Company's response The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "We believe that post-termination compensation schemes are essential to safeguarding our interests, including by procuring ongoing executive cooperation following termination, aligning executive and stockholder interests in a change-in-control scenario, and attracting and retaining talent generally. We provide limited post-termination benefits through our Change-in-Control Plan, and we believe our executive compensation program and the Change-in-Control Plan already include reasonable and appropriate limitations on post-termination compensation. Under the terms of our executive compensation program, executive severance packages are currently not provided outside of a change in control of the Company, and, even then, they are only available for qualifying terminations that occur within 12 months following a change in control of the Company. [...] the Board believes that the policy requested by this stockholder proposal would be impractical and inefficient to implement and inappropriate for the Company. The proposal is not tailored to the design of our executive compensation program and has not been a focus of stockholders during our regular engagement. The Board also believes that the Company's current severance benefits, which are limited to severance benefits following a qualifying termination of employment within 12 months following a change in control, are reasonable and that the Compensation Committee [...] is best positioned to determine whether, and in what forms and amounts, severance benefits should be offered to our executive officers."

PIRC analysis: Change-in-control clauses are seen as anti-takeover measures which can be used to entrench under-performing management in the event of a hostile takeover and the company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact, ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). On the contrary, this proposal is considered to be an advance in corporate governance, as it will allow to reduce the gap between shareowners and management.

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, Chair of the Corporate Governance & Ethics Committee and member of the Audit & Finance Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent due to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Also, in terms of best practice, it is considered that the Corporate Governance & Ethics and Audit & Finance Committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair. At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the Chair of Corporate Governance & Ethics Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure. Furthermore, the Chair of the Corporate Governance & Ethics Committee is considered to be accountable for the Company's sustainability programme and there are concerns over the Company's sustainability policies and practice.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Corporate Governance & Ethics Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. 5.. Amend Articles: Limit Liability of Officers as Permitted by Law

It is proposed that the Restated Certificate of Incorporation of Leidos Holdings Inc, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation]. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuade shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, calls for the Board of Dover Corporation to adopt an enduring policy mandating separation of the roles of Board Chair and Chief Executive Officer (CEO). He argues that these two leadership positions should be held by separate individuals to establish a vital system of checks and balances. According to the proposal, whenever possible, the Chair of the Board should be an independent director, although a temporary non-independent Chair may be appointed while the Board seeks an appropriate independent candidate. The proposal emphasizes that lead independent directors are not an adequate substitute for an independent Chair, noting their limited authority-such as their inability to convene shareholder or full board meetings. The proponent claims that Dover currently lacks this essential safeguard, given that the CEO also serves as Chair, thereby consolidating power and diminishing oversight. The proposal suggests that a clear and transparent leadership separation would strengthen Board independence and shareholder confidence. It urges shareholders to vote in favor of this structural change, which would take effect either at the next CEO transition or at the next CEO contract renewal. The proponent believes that such governance reform would serve the long-term interests of shareholders and bolster accountability at the highest level of corporate leadership.

Company's Response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that Dover's current governance framework already ensures robust independent oversight and Board effectiveness. It maintains that leadership flexibility is critical for adapting to the company's evolving needs, and mandating a fixed separation between the Chair and CEO roles could hinder the Board's ability to respond to circumstances in real time. The Board emphasizes its existing policy allows for the roles to be separated when appropriate, while also establishing a Lead Independent Director position with substantial authority and responsibilities. The current Chair and CEO, Richard J. Tobin, was appointed based on his strategic vision and leadership capacity. In response to concerns about independence, the Board highlights its appointment of experienced director Keith E. Wandell as the incoming Lead Independent Director, following the retirement of former Chair and Lead Independent Director Michael F. Johnston. The Board further points to its composition-entirely independent apart from the CEO-and the strength of its governance practices, including regular executive sessions, annual director elections, and access to special meeting rights and proxy access. It concludes that the current system provides appropriate oversight and flexibility and that a mandated structural change is unnecessary and potentially counterproductive.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Excessive Golden Parachute

Proponent's argument Shareholders request that the Board seek shareholder approval of any senior manager's new or renewed pay package that provides for severance or termination payments with an estimated value exceeding 2.99 times the sum of the executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal only applies to the Named Executive Officers. Shareholders argue the following: "This proposal is relevant even if there are current golden parachute limits. Like this proposal the rules associated with a speed limit provide consequences if the limit is exceeded. This proposal is relevant because the annual say on executive pay vote does not have a separate section for approving or rejecting golden parachutes."

Company's response The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "ITW's 2011 Change-in-Control Severance Compensation Policy (the "CIC Severance Policy") applies in the event of a change in control. The CIC Severance Policy applies to executives whose employment is involuntarily terminated without Cause or terminated by the executive for Good Reason (capitalized terms are defined in the policy) within two years following a change in control. The policy limits cash severance payments for all executives to 2 times the sum of base salary plus the average bonus paid in the prior three years, plus pro-rated bonus payout earned for the current year. Furthermore, cash severance payments under the CIC Severance Policy require a "double trigger," meaning that the executive is only entitled to a severance payment when there is both a change in control and termination of employment without Cause or for Good Reason. This policy is well in line with the compensation practices of our peers and is considered best practice. [...] In summary, ITW's executive compensation programs are aligned with our pay-for-performance philosophy and have received strong shareholder support in annual "Say on Pay" votes. Cash severance in the event of a change-in-control is appropriately limited under our CIC Severance Policy, and the treatment of outstanding equity awards is aligned with the competitive market practices, designed to maximize shareholder value and includes appropriate limits. In contrast, the shareholder proposal, if implemented, could impair our ability to execute a potential change-in-control transaction that is in the best interest of our shareholders and unnecessarily hinder our efforts to recruit and retain executive officers."

PIRC analysis: Change-in-control clauses are seen as anti-takeover measures which can be used to entrench under-performing management in the event of a hostile takeover and the company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact, ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). 6. Amend Articles: Approve Virtual-Only Meetings Until 2027

It is proposed to amend the articles in order to allow virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. 1.E. Re-elect Stephen B. Burke - Non-Executive Director

Non-Executive Director, Chair of the Governance (Remuneration and Nomination) Committee. Not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. In terms of best practice, it is considered that the Remuneration and Nomination Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair. Furthermore, it is considered that the Chair of the Remuneration Committee is responsible for the company's executive compensation, and owing to concerns with the company's executive compensation, opposition is recommended.

Regardless of local practice or recommendations, or average percentage of diversity on the boards of local listed companies, it is considered that gender diversity should be explicitly taken into account when appointing directors. Namely, it is considered that at least one-third of the board should be reserved for the less represented gender. There is an increasing amount of research that suggests that more diverse companies actually perform better than less diverse companies, and they lead to higher returns. By seemingly not including diversity in the composition of the board, and not having an adequate target to do so, it is considered that the company is not taking into account the materiality of non-financial factors, which could be detrimental for shareholders. Additionally, at this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. 2.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Environmental Activities

Proponent's argument: The National Legal and Policy Center requests that Berkshire Hathaway Inc. begin publishing an annual report from 2025 detailing the costs and measurable benefits of Berkshire Hathaway Energy's (BHE) voluntary environmental initiatives specifically those that exceed legal requirements. The proponent argues that shareholders lack transparency regarding the actual impact of BHE's climate related activities, which aim to reach net-zero emissions by 2050. Although BHE invests significantly in renewable energy and non-carbon assets, much of this activity is voluntary and driven by frameworks like the Paris Agreement and the IPCC, which the proponent views as lacking scientific legitimacy. The proposal questions the real world impact of such initiatives on global climate trends, particularly in the context of rising emissions worldwide and the construction of new coal plants in countries like China. The proponent asserts that existing Berkshire reporting fails to clarify whether these green initiatives result in concrete benefits for shareholders, public health, or the environment. It suggests current disclosures may constitute "greenwashing" and urges the company to quantify and justify the value of its voluntary environmental spending.

Company's Response : The Board unanimously recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the requested report is neither necessary nor in shareholders' best interests. It argues that BHE already provides comprehensive reporting on its environmental and financial performance, including emissions disclosures and regular filings with the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission. Additionally, BHE's regulated utility subsidiaries are overseen by state public utility commissions, which assess the prudence of investments and ensure affordability and reliability of service. For example, MidAmerican Energy's electricity rates are substantially below the national average. The Board contends that current disclosures are sufficient for shareholder and regulatory scrutiny, and that the additional reporting would be redundant and of limited value. It views the proposal's critique of BHE's emissions and renewable energy strategy as unfounded, given the regulatory context and already extensive transparency.

PIRC analysis: The proposal appears to function as a spoiler resolution designed to cast doubt on Berkshire Hathaway Energy's voluntary climate related investments and undermine future shareholder efforts to strengthen the company's climate alignment and transparency. While framed as a call for cost-benefit clarity, the resolution implicitly questions the scientific basis and legitimacy of global decarbonisation frameworks such as the Paris Agreement and the IPCC, and characterises voluntary environmental initiatives as unnecessary and ideologically driven. Rather than promoting transparency around climate related financial risk and opportunity, the resolution seeks to delegitimise the company's stated net-zero ambition and potentially disincentivise further climate action. It reframes decarbonisation as a politically motivated burden rather than a strategic and reputational imperative, and offers no constructive alternative for assessing long-term environmental or shareholder value. As such, the resolution risks discouraging climate leadership while failing to ensure the accountability or oversight it claims to seek. Opposition is recommended.

3.. Shareholder Resolution: Improve Executive Compensation Program

Proponent Shareholder: Jing Zhao

Proponent's argument: The proponent recommends that Berkshire Hathaway improve its executive compensation program by incorporating the pay ratio of the highest paid Named Executive Officer (NEO) as a factor. Citing data from the Economic Policy Institute, the proposal argues that CEO compensation in the U.S. has surged disproportionately over 1,000% since 1978, compared to modest wage increases for typical workers. The growing disparity between executive and employee compensation, according to the proponent, contributes to economic inequality and social instability. Referencing Aristotle's philosophy and modern critiques of corporate governance, the proposal highlights the lack of competitive board elections and employee representation as systemic flaws that facilitate excessive executive pay. The proponent also asserts that Berkshire Hathaway's CEO pay ratio, disclosed as 261:1 in the 2024 proxy statement, violates the intent of the Dodd-Frank Act's Section 953(b), which requires transparency on CEO-to-worker pay ratios. Other major U.S. companies, such as JPMorgan Chase, Intel, and Netflix, have seen shareholder pushback against similar compensation practices. The proposal concludes that Berkshire has the flexibility to reform its Compensation and Human Capital Committee to incorporate this pay equity factor, thereby restoring fairness and trust.

Company's Response : The Board recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, stating that Berkshire already complies with the mandatory CEO pay ratio disclosure under Section 953(b) of the Dodd-Frank Act and Item 402(u) of Regulation S-K. However, it notes that there is no regulatory requirement to disclose or integrate the pay ratio of other NEOs, such as the highest paid executive officer aside from the CEO. The Board maintains that including such a metric in compensation planning would not enhance the quality or fairness of Berkshire's executive pay program. The company argues that current disclosure practices are sufficient for transparency and accountability. As a result, the Board does not believe this additional disclosure would offer any meaningful benefits to shareholders or improve the governance of executive compensation. Therefore, shareholders are encouraged to vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The disclosure of the pay ratio between the pay of the CEO or the NEOs and that of the median employee, is mandatory in the US under SEC rules (and applies to US-listed companies such as this) and in several other major Western economies and is considered not only to be best practice but also to provide useful information to shareholders to help guide their approval or disapproval of the executive compensation programmes at a company. Several companies have disclosed the figure voluntarily without any damage to their ability to recruit and incentivise senior level employees. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Civil Rights and Non-Discrimination Report

Proponent Shareholder: American Conservative Values ETF

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Berkshire Hathaway conduct and publish a civil rights and non-discrimination report within the next year. The report should evaluate how the company's policies and practices impact employees and prospective employees across various identity factors including race, religion (including beliefs), sex, national origin, and political views. The proponent argues that while diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) initiatives are often framed positively, they can suppress viewpoint diversity and lead to partiality and ideological conformity. Citing the 2024 Viewpoint Diversity Score Business Index, the proposal accuses Berkshire of promoting divisive concepts like unconscious bias and critical race theory. It references polling showing that employees fear expressing religious or political views in the workplace or online. The resolution also highlights legal and reputational risks following recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions and legal challenges to race-based DEI practices. The proponent suggests that DEI efforts may no longer be legally or socially tenable and that Berkshire must evaluate its risk exposure and clarify its position. The aim is to ensure that freedom of expression and viewpoint diversity are respected across the company, in alignment with American constitutional and market principles.

Company's Response: The Board of Directors recommends a vote against this proposal, asserting that Berkshire Hathaway already complies with all applicable laws related to non-discrimination and civil rights. The company notes that its Code of Business Conduct and Ethics governs the ethical and legal standards of its directors, officers, and employees, and provides channels for reporting any violations. The Board disputes the claim that the company maintains a resource library promoting concepts such as unconscious bias or social injustice, as alleged by the proponent. Berkshire asserts that it operates on a foundational principle: follow the law and do the right thing. The Audit Committee is tasked with monitoring the company's risk exposures, including social risks. Given this existing framework, the Board considers the proposed evaluation and civil rights report unnecessary, both in substance and cost. It does not view the exercise as providing material value to shareholders and believes the proposal misrepresents the company's actual practices.

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of workplace diversity lie in broadening the perspectives that inform decision making, fostering inclusive and innovative work environments, and strengthening a company's ability to serve diverse customer bases, supply chains, and communities. Transparency around employee demographics and inclusive practices enables shareholders to assess how well a company is positioning itself to attract, retain, and engage talent in a competitive global environment. While civil rights and non-discrimination reporting can support these aims when framed constructively, this proposal appears to originate from a politically motivated source with the intent of undermining broader diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) efforts. The resolution emphasizes ideological and political viewpoint discrimination in a manner that misrepresents DEI as inherently exclusionary, and focuses narrowly on speculative short-term risks legal, reputational, and financial while disregarding the long-term value creation that inclusive practices can support. It positions itself as a corrective to "divisive" DEI policies but instead risks chilling legitimate corporate diversity initiatives. The proposal's ideological framing and selective risk assessment suggest that it is a spoiler resolution, aimed more at pushing a specific political agenda than enhancing shareholder value or corporate governance. Opposition is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Racial Discrimination Audit

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Berkshire Hathaway's Board of Directors oversee an independent racial discrimination audit to evaluate legal and reputational risks stemming from subsidiaries' race-based programs. Citing recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions-including Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard and Muldrow v. City of St. Louis-the resolution argues that corporate DEI initiatives may now fall afoul of updated legal interpretations concerning race-based employment and supplier diversity practices. It raises concerns about subsidiaries such as GEICO, Shaw Industries, and Fruit of the Loom, which it claims operate employee resource groups and supplier diversity programs that categorise individuals by race. The resolution suggests these practices could expose the company to lawsuits and reputational harm, especially in light of growing public and legal scrutiny of DEI. It references specific lawsuits and legal actions, warning that litigation or policy shifts could result in billions of dollars in potential liabilities. Furthermore, the proposal highlights the retreat of major corporations from DEI commitments as evidence of emerging financial and legal risk. The resolution concludes that Berkshire must proactively assess its exposure to these risks through an independent audit and public disclosure.

Company's Response: The Board of Directors recommends a vote against the proposal, stating that Berkshire Hathaway already maintains rigorous compliance protocols with all applicable laws, including those related to non-discrimination. The company emphasises that it delegates policy-making authority to its subsidiaries, allowing them to tailor their approaches to the unique demands of their respective businesses. Berkshire's Audit Committee oversees the processes by which senior management evaluates and manages risk-including social and legal risks. The Board disputes the need for a separate, independent racial discrimination audit, especially one targeting specific DEI efforts at its subsidiaries. It asserts that Berkshire's long-standing decentralised model and existing ethical frameworks-such as the Code of Business Conduct and Ethics-ensure legal compliance and accountability. Given these mechanisms, the Board concludes that the requested audit would not add shareholder value and may impose unnecessary costs or create reputational risk based on misleading premises. Accordingly, shareholders are advised to vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Transparent and thorough disclosure on workplace diversity practices and racial equity initiatives is essential for enabling shareholders to evaluate a company's ability to foster an inclusive workplace, attract diverse talent, and mitigate reputational and legal risks associated with discrimination. Numerous studies have highlighted how systemic barriers based on race continue to affect access to economic opportunity, workplace advancement, and representation across sectors. While the proposal frames itself as a legal risk assessment, it reflects a politically motivated attempt to challenge established DEI efforts and undermine progress on racial inclusion. It adopts an adversarial tone, relying on selectively presented legal cases and cultural commentary to argue that DEI is an inherently discriminatory view that contradicts evolving norms in corporate governance and responsible business conduct. Berkshire Hathaway's decentralised model allows subsidiaries to respond to the needs of their specific workforces, and oversight mechanisms already exist to manage legal compliance and ethical standards. This resolution appears designed not to enhance accountability but to deter ongoing efforts toward racial equity within subsidiaries. Opposition is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: DEI Committee

Proponent Shareholder: Meredith Benton of Whistle Stop Capital on behalf of Myra K. Young Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Berkshire Hathaway to designate a Board committee responsible for overseeing the company's diversity and inclusion (D&I) strategy across its portfolio of subsidiaries. The proponent notes that shareholder support for similar resolutions has remained consistently strong since 2021, yet Berkshire has not published disaggregated data on promotion, hiring, and retention by gender, race, and ethnicity. Such data is viewed as critical for assessing whether workplaces within Berkshire subsidiaries are genuinely meritocratic. The resolution cites multiple studies that show persistent discrimination in hiring and advancement based on gender and race, and emphasizes that robust DEI programs are positively correlated with improved financial performance, innovation, and employee engagement. It argues that Berkshire, as a holding company, still bears governance-level responsibility for human capital practices across its entities. Moreover, it highlights litigation costs from past discrimination cases at Berkshire subsidiaries and argues that oversight at the Board level can mitigate these risks while ensuring long-term shareholder value. Establishing a D&I committee, the proponent contends, would strengthen accountability, reinforce ethical standards, and support merit-based advancement throughout the company's businesses.

Company's Response: Berkshire's Board recommends a vote against the proposal, stating that a committee responsible for oversight of diversity and inclusion already exists within the company. Specifically, the Audit Committee's charter was updated in 2022 to formally include the review of environmental and social risks, including those related to diversity. The Committee meets quarterly, or more frequently as needed, to monitor management's policies and strategies around these topics. Berkshire emphasizes its decentralized business model, noting that each operating subsidiary is encouraged to adopt strategies suited to its unique operational context. The Board contends that its current structure sufficiently addresses DEI oversight and that creating a separate committee would duplicate existing governance mechanisms. Accordingly, the Board does not consider the requested action necessary or a beneficial use of company resources and advises shareholders to vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Issues related to diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) are not only relevant from a risk management perspective-considering the reputational, legal, and workforce engagement implications-but also represent key opportunities for long-term value creation. The company's current governance structure delegates DEI oversight to the Audit Committee. A dedicated Board committee with the appropriate expertise would enhance oversight by focusing specifically on strategic DEI goals and benchmarking progress across subsidiaries. Furthermore, Berkshire Hathaway's current performance on diversity-related disclosures has concerns, for example women represent fewer than 33% of Board members, the company does not publish a gender pay gap analysis, and it provides no comprehensive disclosure of workforce diversity metrics. This lack of transparency undermines shareholders' ability to assess how effectively human capital is being managed across its decentralized structure. Given the scale of Berkshire's operations and the potential impact of inclusive practices on long-term shareholder value, the designation of a Board committee on diversity and inclusion is both reasonable and beneficial. Support is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Clean Energy Supply Financing Ratio

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow Foundation

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Berkshire Hathaway annually disclose a "clean energy financing ratio," which would compare the company's financing in low-carbon energy to its investments in fossil fuel-based energy. This metric is proposed as a critical indicator of the company's alignment with global climate goals and its exposure to systemic risk from climate change. The resolution highlights the intensifying climate-driven insurance crisis, pointing to billions in growing losses within Berkshire's own Property & Casualty and Primary Insurance segments, as well as subsidiary AmGUARD's withdrawal from the California homeowner market. It argues that Berkshire's substantial fossil fuel holdings-nearly $96 billion in related equity and debt-and continued underwriting of coal projects contribute to physical climate risks and portfolio-level exposure. As evidence, the resolution cites Berkshire Hathaway Energy's coal asset portfolio and historical life insurance investments heavily tied to fossil fuels. The proposal further notes that a shift toward low-carbon financing aligns with global expectations for a 4:1 ratio of clean to fossil fuel investments by 2030. Disclosure of Berkshire's ratio, including methodology and scope, would give investors insight into whether the company is reducing its contribution to climate change or continuing to increase exposure. The proponent stresses that the requested disclosure is non-prescriptive, allowing the company to determine definitions and boundaries.

Company's Response : Berkshire's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the requested clean energy financing ratio is not appropriate or meaningful for Berkshire's business model. The Board argues that such a metric is primarily designed for banks or financial institutions that underwrite energy sector transactions and that even in those sectors, the metric is not widely adopted or standardised. It states that applying this framework to Berkshire's varied investment mechanisms-across insurance, utilities, and equity portfolios-would yield inconsistent and potentially misleading data. Furthermore, the company emphasises that factors like fluctuating energy prices, evolving policies, and technological shifts would make any ratio highly subjective. Berkshire notes that it is not a bank, does not have a central emissions reduction goal, and sees no benefit in disclosing a ratio that lacks common methodology or clear utility for shareholders. The Board concludes that the proposal would not enhance shareholder understanding or oversight and recommends shareholders vote against it.

PIRC analysis: PIRC analysis: The proponent is seeking a reasonable and targeted form of disclosure that would provide shareholders with insight into how Berkshire Hathaway's capital allocation aligns with global decarbonisation goals-particularly the 1.5°C warming scenario. While the requested clean energy financing ratio is a relatively novel metric, it offers a useful framework for understanding the company's exposure to fossil fuel-related investments relative to low-carbon alternatives. This type of disclosure is increasingly important given Berkshire's significant presence in the insurance, utility, and energy sectors-industries that are both vulnerable to and influential in shaping climate outcomes. The proposal does not seek to impose investment restrictions or prescriptive targets, but rather to enhance transparency about how Berkshire is managing transition risks and identifying potential opportunities within a shifting energy landscape. The company continues to underwrite and invest in fossil fuel projects, including coal, without committing to phase out financing for new fossil fuel infrastructure. These activities carry significant climate-related financial and reputational risks, as well as long-term uncertainty tied to stranded assets. On the other hand, capital flows toward low-carbon energy solutions-such as renewables, energy efficiency, and green infrastructure-represent a strategic opportunity for companies with substantial investment capacity. In the absence of a net zero strategy or science-based target, investors are left with insufficient information on how the company is positioning itself in the face of a rapidly accelerating energy transition. Support is recommended.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Board Committee on Artificial Intelligence

Proponent Shareholder: Tulipshare Capital LLC

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls for Berkshire Hathaway to establish a new Board level committee comprised of independent directors, tasked with overseeing the risks and impacts associated with Artificial Intelligence (AI) across its operations, investments, and portfolio companies. The proponent supports the responsible use of AI to enhance efficiency and growth but warns that ungoverned AI systems present legal, reputational, and societal risks, such as algorithmic bias, misinformation, and lack of transparency. Referencing guidance from the White House and the U.S. National Institute of Standards and Technology, the resolution emphasises the urgent need for AI risk frameworks that prioritise safety, fairness, and human oversight. Berkshire's exposure to AI technologies through portfolio companies such as Amazon and Apple, which have experienced controversies around AI use, further underscores the materiality of the issue. The proposal highlights the growing momentum among institutional investor, including Norges Bank and Legal & General in setting expectations for AI oversight. It notes that shareholder backed AI proposals at major companies have already gained traction and sees a dedicated committee as essential to help Berkshire pre-empt regulatory risk, promote ethical adoption, and remain competitive. The resolution emphasises the need for independent and expert driven guidance in navigating AI's complex challenges and opportunities.

Company's Response: The Board recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, stating that an independent AI committee is unnecessary and inconsistent with Berkshire Hathaway's decentralised management philosophy. The company explains that each subsidiary is responsible for identifying and assessing its own operational and compliance risks, including those posed by emerging technologies such as AI. These risk assessments are conducted annually and must incorporate external risks, guided by the Prohibited Business Practices Policy. Berkshire's Board maintains that existing oversight responsibilities already reside within its Audit Committee and Governance, Compensation, and Nominating Committee, which review governance and enterprise risk management. The Board receives periodic updates on major risks and opportunities across operating businesses, and believes this current structure provides sufficient governance without creating additional layers of oversight. The proposal to charter a new AI committee, according to the Board, is misaligned with the company's structure and would not add value for shareholders.

PIRC analysis: Ethical and strategic management of Artificial Intelligence (AI) is rapidly emerging as a material issue for long-term value creation. While AI presents clear regulatory and reputational risks, particularly when poorly governed, as evidenced by past high profile incidents involving bias and misinformation, it also offers substantial opportunities for innovation, operational efficiency, and competitive differentiation. Given Berkshire Hathaway's extensive investment portfolio, including companies actively deploying AI technologies, oversight of AI-related risk and opportunity is essential. The proposal's call for a Board level committee of independent directors reflects a proactive governance approach, enabling informed oversight, stakeholder engagement, and access to independent expertise on this fast evolving issue. A decentralised governance model, while a defining feature of Berkshire's structure, does not eliminate the need for the Board to consider material emerging issues that span the entire investment universe-AI being a prime example. Notably, other major investors, including Norges Bank and Legal & General, are increasingly setting expectations for portfolio companies to strengthen AI governance, highlighting the importance of clear, company wide oversight structures. While Berkshire's existing governance committees address general risk management, there is no clear evidence that AI strategy or risk is regularly discussed or reviewed at Board level. For a company of Berkshire's scale and exposure, appointing directors with expertise in AI and embedding this issue into a dedicated governance structure would represent a prudent step toward anticipating regulatory shifts and capitalising on the technological transformation underway. Support is recommended.

1.3. Elect Dirk J. Debbink - Senior Independent Director

Senior Independent Director, chair of the Nominating Committee and member of the Audit Committee. Not considered independent as Mr Debbink previously served as a director of the Company from 2004 to 2008, and has a cumulative tenure of over nine years. It is considered that a Senior Independent Director should be independent, in order to fulfil the responsibilities assigned to that role, irrespective of the level of independence of the Board. Similarly, it is considered that the Audit and Nominating Committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nominating Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall.

Lastly, at this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. Additionally, the Chair of the Nominating and Governance Committee is considered to be accountable for the Company's sustainability programme, and there are concerns over the Company's sustainability policies and practice.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. BRISTOL-MYERS SQUIBB COMPANY AGM - 06-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Corporate Financial Sustainability

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The National Center for Public Policy Research urges Bristol Myers Squibb (BMS) to establish a Board level committee on corporate financial sustainability. The resolution contends that the company's positions, advocacy, partnerships, and charitable giving on contentious social and political matters risk alienating customers and damaging shareholder value. The proponent raises concern over BMS's 100% rating on the Human Rights Campaign's Corporate Equality Index, arguing that compliance requires engagement in partisan social issues. Citing sources like the 1792 Exchange, the resolution claims BMS exhibits ideological bias that may discriminate against religious viewpoints and partners. The proposal further critiques BMS's association with the Trevor Project, asserting that support for gender affirming care might entail reputational and financial risks. The supporting statement references market value declines at Bud Light, Target, and Disney following politically divisive stances, arguing that BMS could similarly experience negative financial consequences. To mitigate these risks, the proponent calls for the formation of a new committee to oversee and publicly report on the company's involvement in politically sensitive issues and their financial implications. The resolution stresses that a dedicated committee and public reporting could strengthen shareholder oversight and safeguard long-term value.

Company's Response : The Board of Directors unanimously recommends voting against the proposal, asserting it is unnecessary, duplicative, and not in shareholders' best interests. The Board states that it already maintains strong corporate governance structures that thoroughly address financial sustainability and risk oversight. Oversight of policy positions, advocacy, and partnerships is distributed across standing committees, notably the Audit Committee and the Committee on Directors and Corporate Governance, both of which monitor issues impacting reputation, sustainability, and risk. The Board argues that forming a new committee would only replicate existing responsibilities, resulting in inefficiencies without added value. Additionally, BMS regularly publishes comprehensive disclosures, including its annual Sustainability and Social Impact Report and information about its political engagement and governance policies, all of which are publicly accessible. These documents reflect the Company's ongoing evaluation of potential risks tied to its advocacy and partnerships. According to the Board, the requested additional report would divert resources without offering material new information to shareholders. The Board emphasises that its current governance model allows it to remain focused on long-term growth, shareholder value, and effective operational execution. As such, the proposal is considered both redundant and misaligned with the Company's strategic priorities.

PIRC analysis: Disclosure surrounding the company approved charities allows shareholders to assess corporate values and philanthropic strategy within the broader framework of long-term value creation and stakeholder engagement. Enhanced transparency that more explicitly links charitable giving and public policy engagement with financial sustainability would generally be considered beneficial for shareholders. However, the resolution rests on a disputable premise that donations to certain charities are directly responsible for movements in company stock prices an assertion that oversimplifies complex market dynamics and lacks robust analytical grounding. Furthermore, the proposal appears to be rooted in the intention to promote specific ideological perspectives within the company's charitable activity. While shareholders may hold differing views on the suitability of particular organisations, the presence of donations to charities some may oppose does not necessitate equal representation of all viewpoints. Philanthropic strategies are shaped by a range of business considerations, including relevance to the company's mission, community needs, and long-term stakeholder relationships. Imposing political or viewpoint balancing requirements on charitable contributions could undermine board discretion and operational flexibility. Opposition is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Cease DEI Efforts

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls for Bristol Myers Squibb (BMS) to consider abolishing its Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) programs, policies, department, and goals, citing legal and financial risks. The proposal references the U.S. Supreme Court's SFFA v. Harvard and Muldrow v. City of St. Louis decisions, arguing that these rulings increase the legal scrutiny and potential liability of corporate DEI efforts under equal protection and anti-discrimination laws. The resolution warns that DEI-related initiatives could expose the Company to lawsuits, breach fiduciary duties, and create costly liabilities. It cites recent high-profile discrimination lawsuits and the rollback of DEI initiatives at other major companies-including Alphabet, Meta, Microsoft, and Boeing-as evidence of a growing trend and legal concern. The proposal identifies BMS's current DEI components, including race-based employee resource groups, workforce representation goals, and supplier diversity programs, as areas of risk. The proponent argues that continuation of such efforts, in light of shifting legal precedent and corporate trends, poses significant financial exposure. It concludes that abolishing DEI efforts would protect shareholder value and mitigate reputational and legal risk.

Company's Response: Bristol Myers Squibb's Board unanimously recommends a vote against the proposal, asserting it is not in the best interests of the Company or its shareholders. The Company emphasises its commitment to inclusion, equal opportunity, and legal compliance across all jurisdictions in which it operates. It strongly rejects the characterisation of its DEI policies as discriminatory, affirming that its programs are merit-based and promote a culture of fairness, dignity, and collaboration. BMS argues that an inclusive workforce supports strategic priorities, especially in delivering transformative medicines to diverse patient populations and improving access to clinical trials across demographic groups. The Board underscores that the Company's DEI initiatives are aligned with shareholder value and patient outcomes and are regularly reviewed for compliance with all applicable laws. The proposal's assumptions are refuted as both inaccurate and potentially harmful, as its implementation could hinder existing compliance frameworks and limit management's ability to maintain an inclusive and respectful workplace. The Board concludes that dismantling these programs would negatively impact BMS's strategic objectives, legal responsibilities, and operational effectiveness.

PIRC analysis: The resolution calls for the Company to consider ending its DEI programs, citing legal and financial risks. While legal developments such as SFFA v. Harvard and Muldrow v. City of St. Louis have prompted increased scrutiny of DEI practices, corporate programs that comply with non-discrimination laws remain both legal and strategically important. Effective DEI efforts can enhance decision-making, support talent retention, and help companies respond to the needs of diverse stakeholders. The proposal appears to adopt a narrow, politically driven interpretation of risk, with limited attention to long-term value considerations. The Company's existing DEI disclosures provide transparency and demonstrate alignment with its business goals. Opposition is recommended.

BAXTER INTERNATIONAL INC. AGM - 06-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Retain Significant Stock

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Baxter Board of Directors to adopt a policy requiring the 5 Baxter International named executive officers to retain a significant percentage of stock acquired through equity pay programs until reaching normal retirement age and to report to shareholders regarding the policy in our Company's next annual meeting proxy. For the purpose of this policy, normal retirement age would be an age of at least 60 and be determined by our executive pay committee. Shareholders recommend a share retention percentage requirement of 30% of net after-tax shares. Shareholders argue that: "Requiring senior executives to hold a significant portion of stock obtained through executive pay plans would focus our executives on our company's long-term success. A Conference Board Task Force report stated that hold-to-retirement requirements give executives an ever-growing incentive to focus on long-term stock price performance."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The Board argues the following: "The Board believes that Baxter's emphasis on long-term incentive grants motivates executives to drive the long-term performance of the company and aligns their long-term interests with those of stockholders. For this reason, a significant majority of executive pay is variable and only delivered if specific annual and long-term performance requirements are met. [...] In short, given Baxter's current stock ownership guidelines, governance policies, demonstrated openness and commitment to stockholder responsiveness and accountability, the Board believes this proposal is not necessary and does not provide additional benefit to the company's stockholders. The proposal, in contrast, fails to strike a reasonable balance between aligning the interests of stockholders and management and motivating desired management behavior. It would, therefore, unnecessarily damage Baxter's ability to attract and retain talent and would create an unnecessary administrative burden on Baxter, thereby wasting company resources without commensurate benefit to the company's stockholders. Moreover, Baxter's stockholders considered, and rejected, a similar proposal in 2023 and 2024 with support for the proposal declining year over year. This indicates that Baxter's stockholders remain generally supportive of the Board's position on this proposal and current executive compensation structure."

PIRC analysis: It is considered that the company's policy has some elements of good practice: for example, each executive officer is required to maintain equity investment in the company based upon a multiple of his or her base salary, and the policy prohibits hedging transactions for shares subject to this policy which are not sales but reduce the risk of loss to the executive. However, it is considered that six times base salary should be the requirements for all executives and it is considered that the proposal will introduce positive elements, such as extending the duration of such holdings until retirement age (although it would be acceptable also if it were limited to retirement from the company). On balance, support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Vote on Severance Payments

Proponent's argument Shareholders request that the Board adopt a policy to seek shareholder approval of senior managers' new or renewed pay package that provides for golden parachute payments with an estimated value exceeding 2.99 times the sum of the executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal only applies to Named Executive Officers. Shareholders argue the following: "Golden parachute payments include cash, equity or other compensation that is paid out or vests due to a senior executive's termination for any reason. Payments include those provided under employment agreements, severance plans, and change-in-control clauses in long-term equity plans, but not life insurance, pension benefits, or deferred compensation earned and vested prior to termination. [...] This proposal thus has no impact on the ability to attract executive talent or discourage the use of long-term equity pay because it places no limit on golden parachutes. It simply requires that extra-large golden parachutes be subject to a non-binding shareholder vote at a shareholder meeting already scheduled for other matters."

Company's response The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The Board argues the following: "GE Aerospace has an existing cash severance shareholder approval policy that we believe strikes an appropriate balance among shareholder rights, the Board's exercise of its fiduciary duties and retaining the necessary flexibility to attract and retain executive talent. Moreover, the overly broad policy requested by the proposal does not permit adequate flexibility to be competitive in the marketplace for new executive hires and to retain key talent. [...] Board believes the proposal would adversely affect GE Aerospace's ability to attract senior-level executive talent, for which we compete globally with other companies. The equity-related severance benefits that would be covered by the requested policy often arise in the context of negotiating an employment agreement with an external hire for a senior leadership position, where the overall compensation package typically must be crafted to induce the individual to leave a successful and well-compensated role at another company. [...] The need to retain competitive and flexible tools in the market for executive talent is particularly significant as the company now competes for talent in narrower talent pools for experienced leaders among aerospace and defense companies."

PIRC analysis: Change-in-control clauses are seen as anti-takeover measures which can be used to entrench under-performing management in the event of a hostile takeover and the company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact, ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). On the contrary, this proposal is considered to be an advance in corporate governance, as it will allow to reduce the gap between shareowners and management.

CF INDUSTRIES HOLDINGS INC. AGM - 06-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Excessive Golden Parachutes

Proponent's argument Shareholders request that the Board seek shareholder approval of any senior manager's new or renewed pay package that provides for severance or termination payments with an estimated value exceeding 2.99 times the sum of the executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal only applies to the Named Executive Officers. Shareholders argue the following: "This proposal is relevant even if there are current golden parachute limits. A limit on golden parachutes is like a speed limit. A speed limit by itself does not guarantee that the speed limit will never be exceeded. Like this proposal the rules associated with a speed limit provide consequences if the limit is exceeded. With this proposal the consequences are a non-binding shareholder vote is required for unreasonably rich golden parachutes. This proposal places no limit on long-term equity pay or any other type pay. This proposal thus has no impact on the ability to attract executive talent and does not discourage the use of long-term equity pay because it places no limit on golden parachutes. It simply requires that overly rich golden parachutes be subject to a non-binding shareholder vote at a shareholder meeting already scheduled for other matters."

Company's response The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The Board argues the following: "The Board and its compensation and management development committee, composed entirely of independent directors elected annually to the Board by our shareholders, are best positioned to design and implement executive compensation practices and principles that make sense for our business and that are aligned with the interests of our shareholders. The compensation and management development committee has put considerable thought and care into evaluating and shaping our executive compensation program. In addition, we conduct extensive ongoing outreach and engagement with our shareholders, and their feedback informs our compensation practices and philosophy. The compensation and management development committee and Board believe it is imperative to maintain the flexibility and discretion to structure and provide an overall compensation program that can attract the right leaders in a dynamic, innovative and extremely competitive environment. [...] The Board believes the concerns raised by the proponent are already and more appropriately addressed by our existing executive compensation policies and practices, which are more carefully tailored to the company's needs and the interests of shareholders than the overly broad policy sought by this proposal. Further, adopting the policy requested by the proponent would be unduly restrictive on the company's ability to recruit and retain its most critical employees, would undermine the purpose of an important part of the company's compensation program, and is not in the best interests of the company or its shareholders."

PIRC analysis: Change-in-control clauses are seen as anti-takeover measures which can be used to entrench under-performing management in the event of a hostile takeover and the company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact, ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). On the contrary, this proposal is considered to be an advance in corporate governance, as it will allow to reduce the gap between shareowners and management.

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, member of the Governance Committee and Compensation Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Similarly, the Governance and Compensation Committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members. Deloitte proposed. Non-audit fees represented 7.48% of audit fees during the year under review and 12.08% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than ten years. 4. Shareholder Resolution: Simple Majority Voting

Proponent's argument: Mr. John Chevedden request that the board take each step necessary so that each voting requirement in our charter and bylaws (that is explicit or implicit due to default to state law) that calls for a greater than a simple majority vote be replaced by a requirement for a majority of the votes cast for and against applicable proposals, or a simple majority in compliance with applicable laws. If necessary this means the closest standard to a majority of the votes cast for and against such proposals consistent with applicable laws. Shareholder argues that: "Shareholders are willing to pay a premium for shares of companies that have excellent corporate governance. Supermajority voting requirements have been found to be one of 6 entrenching mechanisms that are negatively related to company performance according to "What Matters in Corporate Governance" by Lucien Bebchuk, Alma Cohen and Allen Ferrell of the Harvard Law School. Supermajority requirements are used to block initiatives supported by most shareowners but opposed by a status quo management."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "the Board proposed that the Company's shareholders approve an amendment to the Charter to remove the supermajority shareholder vote provisions relating to shareholder approval required for certain extraordinary transactions, such as a merger, sale or other disposition of substantially all of the Company's assets, or dissolution and for all future Charter amendments. [...] While the Board is aware of the perception that any supermajority vote provision could create an environment more favorable to the entrenchment of management, it also believes that the critical protection for disinterested shareholders provided by the VSCA affiliated transaction statute, in fact, safeguards the rights of such shareholders to have a meaningful say on the approval of affiliated transactions. Although Proposal 4 is advisory, the Board will take into account shareholder support on this topic in determining whether to revisit the issue of reducing or eliminating the supermajority vote standard for affiliated transactions and amending the affiliated transaction provision."

PIRC analysis: It is considered to be best practice that shareholders should have the right to approve most matters submitted for their consideration by a simple majority of the shares voted. There are concerns that the supermajority provisions which relate to the company's corporate governance documents could frustrate attempts by the majority of shareholders to make the company more accountable or strengthen the independence of the Board. Support is therefore recommended.

Proponent: John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to take the steps necessary to amend the appropriate company governing documents to give the owners of a combined 10% of our outstanding common stock the power to call a special shareholder meeting or the owners of the lowest percentage of shareholders, as governed by state law, the power to call a special shareholder meeting. Shareholders argue the following: "A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting, as called for in this proposal, can help make shareholder engagement meaningful. A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting will help ensure that the NVR Board and management engages with shareholders in good faith because shareholders will have a viable Plan B by calling for a special shareholder meeting. Companies like to claim that shareholders have multiple means to communicate with management but in most cases these means are as effective as mailing a letter to the CEO. Since a special shareholder meeting can be called to replace a director, adoption of this proposal could foster better performance by our directors."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The 25% special meeting ownership threshold included in our bylaws is in line with market practice and in line with the expectations set forth in the proxy voting guidelines of our largest shareholders. As of February 2024, within the S&P 500, 364 companies afford shareholders the right to call a special meeting of shareholders, and over half of these companies have adopted an ownership threshold of 25% or higher for allowing shareholders to call a special meeting. Our Board believes that the 25% ownership threshold is appropriate for NVR and in line with market practice. [...] We are committed to strong and effective corporate governance policies that provide sufficient avenues for shareholders to meaningfully engage with us. We regularly engage with key shareholders to discuss, among other items, governance issues to ensure that management and the Board understand and address issues that are important to our shareholders. Our existing governance policies provide shareholders with numerous avenues to address and discuss our business and governance policies with the Board, and demonstrate our responsiveness and willingness to engage with shareholders and provide them with a meaningful voice."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

Proponent's argument: John Chevedden request that the Board of Directors adopt an enduring policy, and amend the governing documents as necessary in order that 2 separate people hold the office of the Chairman and the office of the CEO. Shareholders argue the following: "Whenever possible, the Chairman of the Board shall be an Independent Director. The Board has the discretion to select a Temporary Chairman of the Board who is not an Independent Director to serve while the Board is seeking an Independent Chairman of the Board on an expedited basis. It is a best practice to adopt this policy soon. However this policy could be phased in when there is a contract renewal for our current CEO or for the next CEO transition. The roles of Chairman and CEO are fundamentally different and should be held by 2 directors, a CEO and a Chairman who is completely independent of the CEO and our company. A lead director is no substitute for an independent Board Chairman."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "As our current Chairman and CEO, Mr. Wren has consistently led Omnicom through strategic evolution, a shifting competitive landscape, and most recently our significant investments in digital innovation and generative AI. Mr. Wren's relationships with clients and key talent further enhance the value he brings as Chairman and CEO and have driven our ability to retain talented Omnicom executives and key client relationships. Continuing in these roles will be critical as the Board oversees management's execution of the IPG acquisition and we enter a period of integration. We also believe it is important to maintain the flexibility to appoint an Executive Chair at the next CEO transition if the Board deems it appropriate at that time, as this structure has supported an effective leadership transition for us in the past. We have been transparent with investors through our disclosure and ongoing dialogue on the importance of this flexibility, and the benefits that our current approach provides to the Company and its shareholders. In light of the supportive feedback we received from shareholders, our robust Lead Independent Director role, the Board's recent election of a new Lead Independent Director, the thoughtful refreshment process that has ensured fresh and independent perspectives on the Board, and the complexity of our business and rapidly evolving industry, the Board believes it is in the best interest of Omnicom and its shareholders to maintain the flexibility to determine the appropriate Board structure."

TYLER TECHNOLOGIES INC AGM - 06-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Political Spending

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: This proposal requests that Tyler Technologies publish a semiannual report disclosing its policies, procedures, and expenditures related to electoral political activity. This includes any use of corporate funds to support or oppose political candidates, campaigns, or referenda, as well as any payments to intermediaries such as trade associations or social welfare organisations that might engage in political activity on the Company's behalf. The report should detail monetary and non-monetary contributions, recipient identities, and the titles of internal decision-makers. The proponent emphasises that without this information, shareholders cannot assess whether the Company's political contributions align with its values and long-term goals, including on climate and social issues. The supporting statement references reputational risks from undisclosed or misaligned political spending and cites peer companies like Celanese, PPG Industries, and International Paper that have adopted similar disclosure practices. The proponent argues that transparency in electoral spending enhances accountability and investor confidence, referencing polling data indicating broad shareholder support for such reforms.

Company's Response : Tyler Technologies' Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting it is unnecessary and overly burdensome. The Company states that it already maintains and publicly discloses a strict policy against political contributions, detailed in its Code of Business Conduct and Ethics. This policy prohibits the use of corporate funds for political campaigns or electioneering, and any exceptions would be subject to high-level internal review. The Company does not contribute to Super PACs, 527 committees, or similar entities, and it asserts that its policy is well-understood across the organisation. The Board contends that additional reporting would offer no material benefit, as there are no corporate expenditures of the type targeted by the proposal. Furthermore, the requested disclosures are seen as unreasonably broad, potentially applying to trade association dues or charitable donations-activities not conducted for political purposes and over which the Company has no control. The Board argues that such disclosures could mislead shareholders and subject the Company to undue external pressure. Referencing historical voting outcomes, the Board also notes that similar proposals at other companies have consistently failed to gain shareholder support, reinforcing its view that the proposal lacks practical merit and is not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: The transparency and completeness of the company's reporting on political spending could be improved. The board's argument makes clear that its compliance with political spending disclosure regulations complies only with the minimum requirements: this is considered incomplete and insufficient. Moreover, it is to the benefit of the company and its shareholders to be open about political spending and so avoid any suspicion and any damage that may cause to the company's reputation, that the company may be using shareholders' funds in an inappropriate way to gain undue influence. The request for a report is considered reasonable and a vote for the resolution is recommended.

CBOE GLOBAL MARKETS INC AGM - 06-05-2025

5. Shareholder Resolution: Political Donations

Proponent: Mr John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that CBOE provide a report, updated semiannually, disclosing the Company's: 1. Policies and procedures for making, with corporate funds or assets, contributions and expenditures (direct or indirect) to (a) participate or intervene in any campaign on behalf of (or in opposition to) any candidate for public office, or (b) influence the general public, or any segment thereof, with respect to an election or referendum. 2. Monetary and non-monetary contributions and expenditures (direct and indirect) used in the manner described in section 1 above, including: a. The identity of the recipient as well as the amount paid to each; and b. The title(s) of the person(s) in the Company responsible for decision-making. The report shall be presented to the board of directors or relevant board committee and posted on the Company's website within 12 months from the date of the annual meeting. This proposal does not encompass lobbying spending. Shareholders argue the following: "Without knowing the recipients of our company's political dollars CBOE directors and shareholders cannot sufficiently assess whether our company's election-related spending aligns or conflicts with its policies on climate change and sustainability, or other areas of growing concern. Improved CBOE political spending disclosure will protect the reputation of CBOE and preserve shareholder value."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The Board argues the following: "In the U.S., federal lobbying expenses are reported in compliance with the U.S. Lobbying Disclosure Act. Cboe files quarterly reports that disclose our lobbying expenditures and detail our lobbying activities. These lobbying disclosure reports may be viewed at disclosurespreview.house.gov by searching for Cboe Global Markets, Inc. We file similar publicly available lobbying reports with state and local agencies as required by state and local law, which in some cases have even broader disclosure requirements than federal law. Any federal lobbying firms we hire are required to file similar reports.[...] We believe that the resources required to implement the additional reporting requested by the proposal are not justified by the benefits. A robust system of governance, reporting, and accountability for Cboe's political contributions already exists. Implementing the proposal is duplicative and would impose undue costs and administrative burdens without providing commensurate value to our stockholders."

PIRC analysis: The transparency and completeness of the company's reporting on political spending could be improved. The company scores low on the CPA-Zicklin Index of corporate political accountability and the board's argument makes clear that its compliance with political spending disclosure regulations complies only with the minimum requirements: this is considered incomplete and insufficient. Moreover, it is to the benefit of the company and its shareholders to be open about political spending and so avoid any suspicion and any damage that may cause to the company's reputation, that the company may be using shareholders' funds in an inappropriate way to gain undue influence. The request for a report is considered reasonable and a vote for the resolution is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Ethical Impact Assessment

Proponent Shareholder: Nicholas Collins

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Nicholas Collins, urges Intel to conduct and publicly release a comprehensive Ethical Impact Assessment regarding its operations in Israel amid mounting international allegations of human rights violations, crimes against humanity, and potential genocide in Gaza. The proposal highlights Intel's substantial presence in Israel, including major fabrication and R&D facilities, during a period of heightened scrutiny over Israel's actions. Collins contends that such presence may lend economic legitimacy to actions broadly condemned by global and Israeli human rights organisations. He calls for an ethical review addressing four key areas: (1) the moral and legal implications of maintaining operations amid alleged violations; (2) the extent to which Intel's presence may provide economic or symbolic support for controversial actions; (3) the criteria for engagement and potential disengagement from countries committing such abuses; and (4) the mechanisms for ongoing ethical evaluation. Emphasising shareholder responsibility in ensuring corporate ethics, the proposal frames this assessment as essential for aligning Intel's operations with its stated Code of Conduct and global human rights principles.

Company's Response : Intel's Board recommends a vote against the proposal, asserting that the requested Ethical Impact Assessment is unnecessary and potentially detrimental. The Board emphasises Intel's deep rooted presence in Israel, including a large workforce and critical manufacturing and R&D facilities, and argues that divestment or downsizing could significantly harm the company and its shareholders. It challenges the premise that corporate operations equate to endorsement of government actions, suggesting the report would not enhance decision making. Instead, Intel highlights its longstanding leadership in human rights, citing its 2009 adoption of Principles on Human Rights and the work of a cross functional Human Rights Steering Committee. Intel also references its ongoing Human Rights Impact Assessments, stakeholder engagement processes, and published Saliency Matrix as evidence of rigorous due diligence. Furthermore, the company outlines its governance structure for risk oversight, including involvement by the Audit and Governance Committees. Ultimately, Intel argues that its current policies and transparency render the proposed report redundant, and producing it would divert resources without offering added value.

PIRC analysis: An Ethical Impact Assessment is a targeted tool designed to identify and address the potential adverse effects of corporate operations on the rights of affected stakeholders. Given the current geopolitical context in which Intel operates in Israel, and the seriousness of the allegations raised by international bodies, a dedicated Impact Assessment could provide shareholders with greater transparency on potential risks and the company's mitigation strategies. While Intel outlines existing human rights governance and reporting mechanisms, it does not clearly demonstrate that it has conducted an Ethical Impact Assessment specific to its operations in Israel or disclosed outcomes that would meet the objectives of the proposal. Greater disclosure could help assess the alignment of its practices with stated commitments and manage potential reputational and operational risks. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Charitable Giving

Proponent Shareholder: American Family Association

Proponent's argument: The proponent, the American Family Association, represented by Bowyer Research Inc., requests that Intel produce an annual report evaluating how its charitable contributions may impact risks related to discrimination based on individuals' speech or religious beliefs. The proposal argues that while corporations frequently support humanitarian causes, some organisations they fund may undermine core freedoms, such as freedom of speech and religion. Specifically, it points to Intel's corporate partnership with the Human Rights Campaign (HRC), an organisation the proponent claims promotes censorship of dissenting views, supports controversial healthcare mandates, and lobbies for policies allegedly threatening to religious liberty. The proponent contends that Intel's charitable giving, including support for the HRC, contradicts its own stated goals on inclusion and diversity, particularly with respect to ideological and religious pluralism. The resolution cites other companies that have reevaluated their giving policies and suggests that Intel follow suit to better align with shareholder values, protect its brand reputation, and ensure its social impact does not alienate stakeholders with diverse viewpoints.

Company's Response : Intel's Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that the requested report is unnecessary given the company's existing robust oversight, transparency, and governance frameworks. Intel outlines that its charitable giving focuses on education and community causes, including STEM initiatives, disaster response, and civic engagement. These donations are already publicly disclosed in Intel's Corporate Responsibility Report, on its foundation website, and through legally mandated filings. The company further notes that all grantees must comply with Intel's non-discrimination policy and that charitable relationships are continuously monitored to ensure alignment with corporate values and legal obligations. Intel's governance mechanisms, including board oversight, are described as sufficient to address any potential risks arising from charitable contributions. The company strongly refutes the implication that its giving practices promote discrimination and reiterates its commitment to diversity, inclusion, and employee freedom of expression. The Board argues the proposal is ideologically motivated, reflects a narrow political agenda, and has been previously rejected by shareholders. It maintains that current disclosure and risk assessment practices render the proposal redundant and not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: Disclosure of company-supported charitable contributions helps shareholders assess alignment with the company's long-term interests, including relationships with diverse stakeholders. However, this proposal centers on ideological and political viewpoints, seeking to scrutinise Intel's charitable giving based on whether it sufficiently reflects certain political or religious perspectives. The request appears to rest on a flawed premise: that corporate donations must represent all ideological positions equally. Corporate philanthropy is not obligated to offer ideological balance, particularly when donations are made to legally compliant organisations that align with the company's social impact goals. Intel already discloses detailed information on its charitable giving, and its oversight mechanisms include compliance with its non-discrimination policies. Given the existing governance processes and transparency in place, and the proposal's intent to influence charitable decisions based on specific ideological criteria, support is not warranted. Opposition is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Act by Written Consent

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, requests that Intel's board amend its governing documents to allow shareholders to act by written consent. This mechanism would enable shareholders holding the minimum number of votes required to take action without convening a formal meeting. The proposal emphasises that this right would allow shareholders to respond more swiftly to governance or performance issues, citing the company's long-term share price decline from $63 in 2020 to $24 in 2024 as a case in point. The proponent argues that the ability to act by written consent could serve as a safeguard against board complacency and as a counterbalance to recent trends such as board exculpation proposals that may reduce director accountability. Notably, a similar proposal received 41% shareholder support in 2020, suggesting significant investor interest. The proposal asserts that written consent rights would enhance board accountability, incentivise better performance, and give shareholders a tool to take timely action on urgent matters without the procedural delays of convening special meetings.

Company's Response: Intel's board opposes the proposal, asserting that the company's current governance framework already provides shareholders with effective rights and protections. These include the ability of 15% of shareholders to call a special meeting, proxy access for director nominations, and annual election of directors by majority vote without supermajority voting requirements. The board expresses concern that permitting action by written consent would allow a small group of shareholders to act without notifying others or allowing inclusive, deliberative discussion. Intel stresses that shareholder meetings offer a fairer, more transparent forum for collective decision making. The board also notes that this is the sixth time the proponent has introduced a similar proposal at Intel, and shareholders have consistently rejected it, with only 34.1% support in 2021. Furthermore, Intel cites that a majority of S&P 500 companies do not allow action by written consent or only allow it unanimously, suggesting the current approach aligns with market norms. The board believes that its active engagement with shareholders and robust governance practices make the proposed change unnecessary and potentially detrimental.

PIRC analysis: Intel shareholders currently have the right to call a special meeting if they hold at least 15% of the company's stock, which reflects a relatively strong shareholder right. However, there may be circumstances particularly in times of crisis or urgent strategic concern where coordinating a special meeting is impractical or too slow. In such cases, the ability to act by written consent offers a more agile mechanism for shareholders to initiate change or respond to emerging issues. The board's concerns about secrecy or lack of deliberation can be addressed through thoughtful implementation rather than outright rejection of the mechanism. Given the proposal's potential to enhance shareholder responsiveness and accountability, and in light of growing investor support in past years, support is recommended.

Independent Non-Executive Director and Chair of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee. At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the Chair of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Human Rights Impact Assessment

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request the Board of Directors publish a report, at reasonable cost and omitting proprietary information, with the results of a Human Rights Impact Assessment (HRIA), examining General Dynamics' actual and potential human rights impacts associated with high-risk products and services, including those in conflict-affected areas and/or those violating international law. Shareholders argue the following: "General Dynamics (GD) is exposed to significant actual and potential human rights risks. The use of its defense products and services may violate the rights to life, liberty, personal security, and privacy. The UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (UNGPs) constitute the global authoritative framework outlining human rights responsibilities of states and businesses, and expectations are heightened for companies with business activities in conflict-affected and high-risk areas. Companies' human rights responsibilities are independent of the state's export licensing determinations, as reiterated in a recent United Nations note. GD's Human Rights policy is not aligned with the UNGPs, and investors lack evidence it is effectively implemented across business functions. Disclosure of HRIAs and remedies is absent. Insufficient human rights monitoring exposes GD and its investors to legal, financial, and reputational risks."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Publishing such a report could also hinder efforts by the U.S. government and its allies to protect human rights. As the active conflicts in Europe and the Middle East illustrate, the international order that secures our conception of human rights is under threat. Democratic governments and their allies are urgently marshaling their industrial capacity to meet the threat and repel actors that take a much dimmer view of human rights than our own. The proposal would force the company, an essential participant in that industrial push, into political activism against the U.S. government's national security policies and in contravention of these efforts. The insertion of private capital and special interest groups into human rights policy is also unlikely to help in any practical terms. The U.S. government is better positioned to actually protect human rights. The U.S. government, by law and policy, takes human rights into consideration in permitting international arms transfers. It has active monitoring programs in place to ensure adherence to its policies and restrictions on end use and transfer of weapons. And it can, and does, punish countries that fail to live up to its values.

PIRC analysis: The Human Rights Impact Assessment (HRIA) is a format that distinguishes itself from other due diligence methods by focusing specifically on identifying, understanding, assessing, and addressing the adverse effects of business projects or activities on the human rights enjoyment of impacted rights-holders, such as workers and community members. Risks related to human and labour rights across operations and supply chain can have significant reputational and financial consequences for a company and it is in the best interests of shareholders to be informed of the Company's exposure to and management of such risks. While the company indicates that it is committed to respecting human rights and has already fulfilled or will fulfil the actions included in the proposal, it fails to make a case as of why this proposal be counter-productive. Overall, it does not seem that the company performed an actual Human Rights Impact Assessments that will allow disclosing to shareholders a data-based picture of its exposure and corresponding measures of prevention, mitigation and remediation, which in turn would be essential, in order to uphold company's policies on human rights and labour rights, as well as minimize corresponding risks. Support is recommended.

Independent Chair of the Board, member of the Compensation and Talent Management Committee and Governance and Sustainability Committee.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. DOMINION ENERGY INC AGM - 07-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Request to Consider Eliminating Non-Carbon Emitting Generation Goals in Executive Pay Incentives

Proponent's argument: National Legal and Policy Center request the Board of Directors' Compensation and Talent Development Committee to revisit its incentive guidelines for executive pay, to re-emphasize fiduciary goals and consider eliminating NCGC-based incentives from compensation inducements. Shareholders argue the following: "Despite evidence that climate alarmism and associated renewable energy policies are unwarranted, Dominion Energy, Inc.'s executive pay program incorporates unnecessary incentives to attain "non-carbon emitting generation capacity" goals (NCGC): Under the Company's 2023 60% performance grant in its long-term incentive program, named executive officers received performance grants that included a "10% weighting" for NCGC. The NCGC performance metric measures the company's wind, solar, nuclear and conventional hydro generation capacity as a percentage of its total generation capacity."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The Board argues the following: "The use of a NCGC performance metric is a component of this strategy, encouraging officers to focus on the company's long-term strategic plan, which includes delivering increasingly clean energy while maintaining reliability and affordability for customers. [...]The Board of Directors believe that the NCGC performance metric is an appropriate performance metric for our executive compensation program because it supports our "all-of-the-above" approach to meeting our customers' energy needs by encouraging the development of diverse non-carbon emitting generation sources. This development process directly aligns with our mission to provide reliable, affordable and increasingly clean energy. [...] The Board considered this proposal, its fiduciary duties, the design and philosophy of the company's executive compensation program and the company's strategy. We believe that eliminating the NCGC performance metric at this time is not in the best interests of the company or its shareholders."

PIRC Recommendation: The resolution is rooted in a broader ideological dispute over climate science rather than material governance shortcomings. The proponent disputes widely accepted scientific consensus and regulatory realities that shape the utility industry. While debate over climate models is valid in policy circles, its import here is limited: the proponent does not convincingly demonstrate how the NCGC metric materially harms shareholder value or imposes unjustified costs. The resolution fails to demonstrate that the NCGC metric undermines fiduciary duty or shareholder value. Dominion's compensation structure is well-justified, legally anchored, and shareholder-supported. Removing sustainability-linked performance metrics would risk undermining strategic alignment and regulatory compliance.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Recoupment of Bonuses

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to "amend the Company Policy on recoupment of incentive pay to apply to the [sic] each Named Executive Officer and to state that conduct or negligence-not merely misconduct-shall trigger mandatory application of that policy. Also the Board shall report to shareholders in each annual meeting proxy the results of any deliberations regarding the policy, including the Board's reasons for not applying the policy after specific deliberations conclude, about whether or not to cancel or seek recoupment of unearned compensation paid, granted or awarded to NEOs under this policy."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "the Company's 2019 Stock Incentive Plan provides that awards granted thereunder, including any amounts or benefits arising from such awards, are subject to recovery by the Company in accordance with any clawback or recoupment arrangements or policies the Company has from time to time, including, without limitation, the Company Recoupment Policies. Similarly, the Key Executive Short-Term Incentive Compensation Plan provides that awards granted thereunder, and all amounts paid and payable in respect of these awards, are subject to the Group Clawback Policy and any successor plan thereto. [...] the Company Recoupment Policies more than meet the essential objective of the proposal, which is to ensure that the Company has a policy in place for recovery of "unearned" pay in case of a restatement, without regard to fault by an executive, and additionally to recover incentive-based compensation under a broad range of conduct contrary to the interests of the Company and its shareholders by the NEOs. Because the various provisions contained in the Company's existing policies and programs compare favorably with, and thus substantially implement, the guidelines of the proposal, the Board does not believe the proponent's proposal is necessary."

PIRC analysis: The proposal would require disclosure of recoupment of remuneration under slightly broader circumstances than are typically included in the proxy reports of most companies. However, while stating that measures of application of the claw-back provisions are made in the proxy filings, the company fails to make a case as of why this proposal be counter-productive. The proposal will be an advance in corporate governance and additional disclosure is considered to be beneficial for shareholders and stakeholders alike. On this basis, support for the proposal is recommended.

GILEAD SCIENCES INC AGM - 07-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: CEO Pay Ratio

Proponent Shareholder: Jing Zhao

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Gilead Sciences to incorporate the CEO pay ratio as a factor in the Company's executive compensation program. The proponent argues that the current disparity between CEO pay and median employee compensation is excessive and unsustainable. Referencing Gilead's 2023 CEO pay ratio of 110:1 (an increase from 89:1 in 2022), the proposal highlights concerns about growing income inequality and its negative impact on social and economic stability. Drawing on historical and philosophical sources such as Aristotle and Adam Smith, the proponent suggests that unchecked executive compensation reflects a misuse of power. The proposal cites research showing a dramatic rise in CEO pay relative to worker compensation over the past several decades, contrasting U.S. trends with more moderate practices in Europe and Japan. It also notes recent shareholder pushback against executive pay packages at several large U.S. corporations. The proposal urges the Board to reform the Compensation and Talent Committee's methodology to integrate the CEO pay ratio as a governance metric for fairness and long-term corporate sustainability.

Company's Response : The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that Gilead's executive compensation program is carefully structured to align pay with performance and shareholder value. The Company emphasises that a significant portion of executive pay is performance based and subject to annual review by the Compensation and Talent Committee. Gilead believes that internal pay equity is already considered through a holistic evaluation of roles, responsibilities, and market conditions. The Board argues that the CEO pay ratio, as mandated by SEC rules, is a limited and highly variable metric, influenced by company size, structure, and workforce distribution, and thus not meaningful in guiding compensation decisions. Gilead states that its current compensation philosophy has consistently received strong shareholder support over 91% approval in recent say-on-pay votes and that investor feedback has not indicated a desire for changes incorporating the CEO pay ratio. The Company also cautions that adopting this metric could undermine flexibility in attracting and retaining top executive talent. Overall, the Board considers the proposal unnecessary and misaligned with its strategic compensation framework.

PIRC analysis: Disclosure of the CEO pay ratio is already mandatory for U.S.-listed companies under SEC rules and is widely regarded as a governance best practice. While Gilead reports this figure as required, the proposal seeks to enhance its relevance by incorporating it into the Company's executive compensation decision-making framework. The CEO pay ratio can serve as an additional lens through which to evaluate internal pay equity and the broader alignment between executive pay and workforce compensation. The company argues that the ratio is not a meaningful input for setting executive pay due to market variations, but several companies have successfully used similar metrics without compromising their ability to attract or retain senior talent. Integrating this factor would not prevent the Company from applying a performance-based pay structure but would introduce a relevant perspective on fairness and sustainability. Support for the resolution is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Gilead Sciences to adopt a policy requiring that the roles of Board Chair and CEO be held by separate individuals, with a preference for an independent Chair. It suggests that the combination of these roles undermines board oversight and deprives shareholders of a key check and balance mechanism. The proponent notes that previous shareholder support for similar proposals has approached 44%. He argues that lead independent directors lack the authority of a truly independent Chair, as they cannot call shareholder or board meetings independently. The proposal links Gilead's flat long-term stock performance to potential deficiencies in governance and asserts that splitting the CEO and Chair roles would enhance board accountability and independence. A phased implementation is suggested, to take effect during the next CEO transition or contract renewal. The resolution aligns with broader calls for board independence and is presented as a governance reform that can support shareholder value.

Company's Response : The Board opposes the proposal, recommending a vote against the proposal. It asserts that the Board should retain the flexibility to determine the most appropriate leadership structure based on the Company's needs and circumstances. Gilead maintains that its governance practices such as having a majority independent Board, fully independent committees, and robust annual evaluations already ensure effective oversight. The current structure includes a Lead Independent Director, who the Board asserts performs many of the functions of a separate Chair and provides strong independent leadership. The Board contends that requiring a permanent separation of the CEO and Chair roles would unnecessarily restrict its discretion and could be counterproductive depending on future circumstances. The Company argues that combining these roles, as currently done with Mr. O'Day, enables unified leadership and strategic alignment, and that past shareholder votes and engagement efforts have not shown widespread support for a mandated separation. The Board concludes that the proposal would limit governance flexibility and is not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Human Rights Policy and Human Rights Due Diligence Process

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Mercy Investment Services, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Gilead Sciences to adopt a formal and comprehensive human rights policy, committing the company to internationally recognised standards and implementing a human rights due diligence (HRDD) process. The proponent references the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, which recommend companies establish policies and HRDD mechanisms that cover operations, products, and supply chains. The resolution emphasises that access to medicines is a component of the right to health, citing international frameworks such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Sustainable Development Goal 3. The proponents argue that Gilead lacks a policy explicitly committing to the right to health and does not appear to conduct or disclose internal human rights impact assessments. Concerns are raised about limited access to critical HIV treatments, the pricing of lenacapavir, and prior legal action relating to delayed access to less toxic HIV medications. The proponents maintain that a stand-alone policy and HRDD framework would allow Gilead to better anticipate and manage human rights risks across its value chain and align its practices with global expectations for corporate responsibility.

Company's Response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that Gilead already demonstrates a strong commitment to human rights through existing frameworks and public reporting. The company highlights its long-standing participation in the UN Global Compact and alignment with Sustainable Development Goals. Gilead emphasises that human rights standards are embedded in its Code of Ethics, Supplier Code of Conduct, and ESG disclosures, and that it expects suppliers to conduct their own risk assessments and HRDD. The company also outlines extensive efforts to improve global health equity, including drug access programs, innovative licensing models, and education initiatives aimed at reducing stigma and supporting underserved populations. Gilead argues that a separate policy would be redundant and unnecessary, given its ongoing monitoring and responsiveness to evolving human rights issues. The Board also maintains that diverting resources toward an additional formal policy and process would not result in material benefit to shareholders or operations, as its existing governance approach already addresses the proposal's intent.

PIRC analysis: The resolution requests that the company adopt a comprehensive human rights policy and implement a human rights due diligence process aligned with international frameworks such as the UN Guiding Principles. Unlike spoiler resolutions that frame human rights through a narrow geopolitical lens or seek to advance ideologically driven disengagement from certain markets, this proposal focuses on systemic governance and transparency. It highlights specific concerns around access to medicines, ethical licensing, and pricing-areas where human rights risks are material to a global pharmaceutical company. The resolution seeks to ensure that Gilead's policies not only cover suppliers but extend to its own operations and products, particularly where health impacts are concerned. Establishing clear commitments and due diligence procedures would enhance the company's ability to manage reputational, legal, and operational risks while aligning with stakeholder expectations on global health equity. On this basis, support is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: DEI Practices for Contractors

Proponent Shareholder: Bowyer Research, Inc. on behalf of David Bahnsen, Trustee of the Bahnsen Family Trust

Proponent's argument: The resolution calls for a report assessing the potential risks associated with Gilead Sciences' Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) requirements for contractors, including the risk of discrimination based on race, religion, sex, political views, or other protected characteristics. The proponent argues that current supplier policies may compel vendors to adopt ideological or politically charged DEI initiatives, which could expose the Company to legal and reputational risk. Citing concerns raised by recent court rulings and federal legal trends, the proposal suggests that Gilead's DEI linked procurement expectations may be legally vulnerable, particularly in light of heightened scrutiny around race and belief based contracting. It also references declining public support for corporate involvement in social policy issues, along with examples of companies withdrawing or scaling back DEI efforts. The proposal claims that existing policies may violate civil liberties and inhibit viewpoint diversity and calls for enhanced transparency regarding how such DEI expectations are communicated and enforced in the supplier selection process. The requested report would help determine whether these practices expose Gilead to unnecessary legal or reputational risk.

Company's Response : Gilead's Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that the company already operates under a strong legal compliance framework and equitable procurement policies. The Company emphasises that its supplier selection process is competitive and inclusive, but not discriminatory. While the Company aims to expand access to diverse suppliers, it does not mandate participation in DEI programs as a prerequisite for selection, nor does it engage in unlawful discrimination. Gilead argues that supplier diversity supports innovation, resilience, and alignment with the Company's broader health equity mission. Furthermore, the Company points to its enterprise wide risk management system, which includes oversight by the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee and regular reporting to the Board on relevant legal and ESG risks. Given these existing structures, Gilead maintains that the requested evaluation would add limited value while unnecessarily diverting resources. The Board concludes that the proposal is duplicative of existing practices and is not in the best interest of shareholders or the Company.

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of supplier diversity lie in widening perspectives across the value chain, strengthening innovation, and building resilience in operations. Encouraging participation from a broad spectrum of vendors helps companies reflect the complexity of their customer base and the societies in which they operate. Transparency over such practices allows shareholders to assess how inclusion is embedded into the company's long-term business model. However, this resolution appears to have been filed by actors affiliated with right-wing advocacy networks and seems designed less to promote meaningful oversight than to challenge the legitimacy of corporate diversity frameworks. The proposal emphasises speculative legal and reputational risks while ignoring the strategic rationale and legal compliance underpinning current inclusion practices. It is framed around political objections to DEI and reflects a broader effort to discourage corporate engagement in diversity and inclusion under the guise of protecting civil liberties. Opposition is recommended.

5.. Amend Certificate of Incorporation to Reflect New Delaware Law Provisions Allowing for Officer Exculpation

It is proposed to amend the Company's Certificate of Incorporation to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation. Article Ninth of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonise corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are, however, a more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuade shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Effectiveness of its Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Efforts

Proponent Shareholder: Friends Fiduciary Corporation

Proponent's argument: The shareholder proposal, submitted by Friends Fiduciary Corporation, requests that Arch Capital Group Ltd. report on the effectiveness of its diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) efforts. The requested report should provide quantitative metrics on hiring, retention, and promotion rates disaggregated by gender, race, and ethnicity, and be published at reasonable cost without disclosing proprietary information. The proponent argues that this data is essential for investors to assess the company's human capital management, citing industry trends where many large companies have significantly increased their transparency regarding workforce composition and advancement. The proposal underscores the financial benefits of diversity, referencing multiple studies that link diversity with improved profitability, stock performance, and employee retention. It also highlights the structural inequities that persist in hiring and promotion, including racial bias in callbacks and the "broken rung" limiting advancement opportunities for women and people of color. In this context, the proponent contends that Arch Capital's lack of EEO-1 disclosure and absence of specific DEI performance metrics place it behind peers like Assurant, Everest Group, Hartford, and Travelers, and leave investors without adequate information to evaluate whether DEI practices are translating into meaningful results.

Company's Response : Arch Capital's Board recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, arguing that it is overly prescriptive and that fulfilling the request would not be a good use of resources. The Board asserts that the company already provides substantial employee related disclosures in its Annual Report on Form 10-K and its Sustainability Report. These documents highlight Arch's commitment to recruiting and retaining top talent and fostering an inclusive culture. The company emphasises that it prioritises long-term shareholder value through disciplined business execution, which includes a strong emphasis on employee engagement and performance, without requiring further DEI metrics reporting. Arch further argues that the requested additional reporting lacks economic merit, would be inefficient, and would not contribute to enhanced shareholder value. The company reports strong financial performance $15.7 billion in net premiums and $4.3 billion in net income for 2024 and believes that its current approach sufficiently demonstrates its commitment to human capital development. Ultimately, the Board views the implementation of the proposal as unnecessary and misaligned with shareholder interests, stating it would not enhance the company's long-term value proposition.

PIRC analysis: The proposal seeks a report providing shareholders with quantitative data to assess the effectiveness of Arch Capital's diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) initiatives. While the company outlines its general approach to DEI and references disclosures made through its Annual Report and Sustainability Report, it does not provide detailed metrics on hiring, promotion, and retention by gender, race, and ethnicity, as requested. Current disclosures include workforce composition by gender and people of colour, but do not extend to senior management representation, despite noting increased recruitment at those levels. The company's rationale for not publishing its EEO-1 report emphasising broader definitions of diversity may be viewed as an opportunity to expand upon the request by offering additional data beyond the scope of the EEO-1 framework. A dedicated report addressing workforce composition and the policies in place to support DEI efforts could provide greater transparency and assist investors in evaluating how the company manages associated human capital and reputational risks. The request is specific and measurable, and support is recommended.

14. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent: Mr. John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to take the steps necessary to amend the appropriate company governing documents to give the owner of a combined 10% of our outstanding common stock the power to call a special shareholder meeting or the owners of the lowest percentage of shareholders, as governed by state law, the power to call a special shareholder meeting. Shareholder argue the following: "A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting, as called for in this proposal, can help make shareholder engagement meaningful. A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting will help ensure that the LKQ Corporation Board and management engages with shareholders in good faith because shareholders will have a viable Plan B by calling for a special shareholder meeting. Companies like to claim that shareholders have multiple means to communicate with management but in most cases these means are as effective as mailing a letter to the CEO. Since a special shareholder meeting can be called to replace a director, adoption of this proposal could foster better performance by our directors."

Company's response: The board recommended abstain this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Board of Directors has considered the proposal set forth above and has determined to make no voting recommendation with respect to the proposal to our stockholders. The proposal is advisory in nature only. If approved, this proposal would not automatically provide stockholders with the right to request special meetings, as this proposal is a non-binding recommendation to the Board to take steps necessary to amend our governing documents to provide stockholders with the right to request special meetings at a 10% ownership threshold."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. 4.. Shareholder Resolution: Third-Party Assessment on Non-Sugar Sweetener Risks

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by The Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother International Finance, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The resolution requests that PepsiCo commission a third-party assessment on its use of non-sugar sweeteners (NSS), such as aspartame, and their potential health risks. The report would evaluate how PepsiCo assesses NSS safety, including the scientific and regulatory authorities it relies upon and any affiliations or financial relationships with researchers or agencies issuing health guidance on NSS. The proposal cites growing global concern over long-term health impacts of NSS consumption, including guidance from the World Health Organisation warning against their use for weight control and potential associations with metabolic diseases and cancer. It highlights recent classifications by the International Agency for Research on Cancer and emerging peer reviewed studies raising questions about the effects of NSS on neurodevelopment, the microbiome, cardiovascular health, and glucose regulation. Given that NSS are used widely in PepsiCo's diet beverages, and that PepsiCo markets itself under a sustainability and health forward strategy (Pep+), the proponents argue that a comprehensive and independent review would improve transparency and enable more informed consumer and investor decisions. The proposal seeks alignment between PepsiCo's product portfolio and its stated commitments to consumer wellbeing and long-term sustainability.

Company's Response: PepsiCo's Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that a third-party assessment is unnecessary given the Company's robust internal scientific, regulatory, and risk management frameworks. PepsiCo argues that it already employs highly qualified toxicologists, nutrition scientists, and regulatory professionals who actively monitor global research and safety assessments related to NSS, and that it only uses ingredients affirmed as safe by leading regulatory bodies including the FDA, EFSA, and JECFA. The Company acknowledges recent WHO guidance on NSS but emphasises that the recommendation was "conditional" and based on low-certainty evidence, and not a challenge to the safety of these ingredients. PepsiCo asserts that aspartame has been extensively studied for over four decades, reaffirmed as safe by global authorities, and remains a key component of sugar-reduction strategies across its portfolio. The Board believes that PepsiCo's existing systems provide effective oversight and alignment with global food safety standards and that an additional third-party review would offer no new material benefit, particularly given shareholder opposition to a similar proposal in 2024. The proposal is viewed as duplicative and not aligned with shareholder interests.

PIRC analysis: The requested report would provide shareholders with greater transparency into how the company is addressing emerging scientific and public health concerns related to non-sugar sweeteners (NSS). As regulatory guidance evolves and consumer awareness increases, understanding the long-term health impacts of NSS, particularly in widely consumed products like diet beverages has clear implications for product strategy, brand integrity, and reputational risk. This proposal links nutritional composition with long-term financial outcomes, both for consumers and broader healthcare systems. Though not directly referenced, the COVID-19 pandemic reinforced the importance of corporate responsibility in contributing to public health resilience. A stakeholder wide approach to nutrition and wellness is increasingly expected, especially for global companies with influence over population diets. This resolution supports investor ability to assess how PepsiCo is managing exposure to shifting health risk perceptions and scientific developments. The request for a third-party assessment is reasonable in scope and would align PepsiCo's disclosures more closely with its health and sustainability commitments. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: EEO-1 Workplace Diversity Report

Proponent Shareholder: The Nathan Cummings Foundation

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that PepsiCo conduct a third-party racial equity audit, examining the racial impacts of its policies, practices, products, and services. The audit would produce recommendations to help the company address potential inequities and enhance inclusiveness across operations. The proponent notes that while PepsiCo has engaged in various diversity efforts and participated in racial equity certification programs, these actions are not a substitute for an independent, comprehensive assessment. The resolution emphasizes that leading civil rights organizations have called for such audits as a best practice and outlines clear criteria for audit integrity, including transparency, independence, and meaningful stakeholder engagement. The proposal points to reputational risks and public controversies, such as past advertising missteps and workplace allegations, as well as disparities in marketing and hiring practices, to support the need for deeper evaluation. With over 196 million shares voting in favor of a similar proposal in 2024, the proponents argue that a racial equity audit would help PepsiCo uphold its commitments to racial justice, strengthen stakeholder trust, and identify actionable ways to embed equity across its operations and value chain.

Company's Response : PepsiCo's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the company has already undertaken substantial work with independent third parties to assess and inform its diversity, equity, and inclusion strategies. This includes external partnerships, pay equity reviews, and internal feedback loops from employee resource groups and community advisors. PepsiCo highlights its historical leadership in diversity, including a comprehensive global pay equity program and transparent EEO-1 disclosure of workforce demographics. The Company also cites recent investments in marketing aimed at expanding access to healthier options and supporting diverse communities. It maintains that its current framework aligns talent strategy with inclusive growth, informed by ongoing dialogue with stakeholders and external experts. The Board argues that a separate racial equity audit would duplicate existing efforts, offer limited additional benefit, and not be an efficient use of resources. It emphasizes the alignment between PepsiCo's DEI initiatives and its strategic business goals and concludes that the requested audit is unnecessary.

PIRC analysis: The requested report will provide shareholders with information on the company's efforts in relation to workforce diversity. While the Company's response describes the diversity initiatives it is involved in, satisfying one part of the proponent's request, it gives data only on the total make-up of its workforce as regards gender and people of colour, and manages to avoid any such disclosures for senior management, despite saying that it has increased recruitment in this area. Listing other areas of diversity which are not covered by EEOC data requirements as a reason for not disclosing EEOC data should be used to offer to improve upon the proponent's request by disclosing all areas of diversity. A specific report on the gender and ethnic make-up of the company's workforce and a description of the policies and programmes for fostering diversity of employees would enable investors to assess the company's exposure to reputation al and human resource risk surrounding the issue of diversity. The request for a report is considered reasonable and a vote for the resolution is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Risks Related to Biodiversity and Nature Loss

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Green Century Equity Fund

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that PepsiCo publish a report assessing how its supply chains and operations impact biodiversity and are vulnerable to nature loss. The proponent argues that biodiversity loss presents systemic, financial, and regulatory risks that could materially affect PepsiCo's long-term viability. PepsiCo's extensive global sourcing of agricultural commodities often from biodiversity sensitive regions exposes it to environmental dependencies and risks, including those related to water, land use, and agrochemical impacts. The resolution cites international regulatory trends, investor pressure, and nature related benchmarks (such as the Taskforce on Nature related Financial Disclosures, or TNFD) as reasons for proactive transparency. It also highlights findings from third-party assessments indicating PepsiCo falls short in biodiversity reporting. Despite several positive sustainability initiatives, the proponent argues that PepsiCo lacks a systematic, company wide review of biodiversity related impacts and dependencies. Such a review would help identify vulnerabilities, mitigate regulatory and reputational risks, and demonstrate leadership in sustainable sourcing. The proposal is positioned as a forward looking governance tool to align corporate performance with emerging environmental expectations and long-term investor interests.

Company's Response: PepsiCo's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the Company already addresses biodiversity and nature loss within its broader ESG disclosures. The Company highlights its long-standing commitment to environmental sustainability through initiatives like pep+, regenerative agriculture, water use efficiency, and forest conservation. It points to detailed reporting across more than 50 sustainability topics on its website, including agriculture, climate, deforestation, and packaging. PepsiCo argues that its evolving strategy integrates expert input, stakeholder feedback, and alignment with established frameworks such as SASB and TCFD. A new biodiversity section was added to its ESG reporting in 2024. The Company contends that producing a stand alone report would be duplicative, resource intensive, and unlikely to provide new insights beyond what is already shared. The Board emphasises that it and its Sustainability and Public Policy Committee actively oversee sustainability risks and strategies, including those related to nature. In light of existing programs, measurable progress, and transparent disclosures, the Board believes the requested report is unnecessary and not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: Risks related to biodiversity loss and ecosystem degradation particularly through unsustainable agricultural sourcing pose significant reputational, operational, and financial risks for companies with extensive global supply chains like PepsiCo. While the company has made progress through initiatives like its pep+ strategy and commitments to eliminate deforestation, it does not currently provide a comprehensive assessment of its exposure to nature related risks, including dependencies on biodiversity and the resilience of its agricultural inputs. These risks are further amplified by increasingly frequent extreme weather events and evolving regulatory expectations tied to climate and biodiversity disclosures. Ensuring that suppliers are meeting robust environmental standards is a baseline due diligence obligation. A systematic biodiversity risk assessment would not only align PepsiCo with emerging international frameworks such as the Taskforce on Nature related Financial Disclosures (TNFD), but also strengthen investor confidence in the company's preparedness to manage future disruptions. Given the growing materiality of biodiversity-related risks and the gaps in current disclosures, support is recommended.

*7.. Shareholder Resolution: Sustainable Packaging Policies for PlasticsProponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Michael E. Monteiro 2016 Rev Trust, c/o As You Sow

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that PepsiCo issue a report evaluating how it can address its use of flexible plastic packaging, especially non-recyclable plastics, in line with recommendations from the Pew Charitable Trusts' Breaking the Plastic Wave report. The proponents cite growing global concern over plastic pollution and related financial, regulatory, and reputational risks. They highlight PepsiCo's lagging progress toward its 2025 sustainable packaging goals, especially in reducing flexible plastics, which are difficult to recycle and heavily used in snack products. The resolution calls for an assessment of the risks linked to continued reliance on these materials, as well as an evaluation of innovative alternatives including reusable packaging and paper-based substitutes. The proposal encourages PepsiCo to work collaboratively with peers to advance scalable reuse systems and calls attention to regulatory developments in Europe and U.S. states that increasingly target single use plastics. It frames flexible packaging reduction as a material business risk and strategic opportunity for sustainability leadership and long-term value creation.

Company's Response : PepsiCo's Board recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that it is narrowly focused, duplicative, and overlooks the company's broader, well established packaging strategy. The Company emphasises its comprehensive, global approach to packaging, which includes efforts to reduce usage, improve recyclability, and innovate new materials. PepsiCo reports significant progress, including investments in paper based and bio-based alternatives, initiatives for refillable models, and pilot programs in compostable packaging. It highlights engagement with cross sectoral stakeholders, policy makers, and recycling coalitions worldwide, and points to alignment with voluntary standards such as the Ellen MacArthur Foundation's design principles. The Company states that flexible films make up just 5% of its packaging by weight and are optimised for product safety and low environmental impact. PepsiCo also references annual sustainability reporting and Form 10-K disclosures outlining packaging related risks. The Board concludes that the proposed report would offer limited incremental value and that the Company's existing commitments, disclosures, and partnerships already address the concerns raised in the resolution.

PIRC analysis: Reporting on sustainability related risks, including those linked to packaging and plastic pollution, is in shareholders' interests. It provides insight into how effectively the company is managing long-term operational, regulatory, and reputational risks, and whether its strategic response is aligned with evolving stakeholder expectations. While PepsiCo outlines numerous initiatives across its packaging portfolio, current disclosures lack clarity on key outcomes, particularly regarding the recyclability and recyclability-in-practice of flexible plastic packaging. The requested report would help shareholders assess where challenges remain and how the company might improve, including through greater innovation and collaboration on reusable or compostable alternatives. In this context, additional transparency is warranted. Support is recommended.

25. Authorise the Board to Increase the Number of Shares Issued in case of Exceptional Demand

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 15%, in case of exceptional demand.

A green shoe authorisation enables an authorization of additional shares in the event of exceptional public demand. In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 15% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. Given the potential for inequitable treatment of shareholders, opposition is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Written Consent

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the Board of directors take the steps necessary to enable 10% of shares to request a record date to initiate written consent. Shareholders argue the following: "Currently it takes the formal backing 32% of all shares that normally cast ballots at the annual meeting to do so little ask for a record date for written consent. Plus any action taken by written consent would still need 65% supermajority approval from the shares that normally cast ballots at the annual meeting. This 65% vote requirement gives overwhelming supermajority protection to management that will remain unchanged. Enabling 10% of shares to apply for a record date for written consent is reasonable because scores of companies do not even require 01% of stock ownership to do so little as request a record date. Taking action by written consent is a means shareholders can use to raise important matters outside the normal annual meeting cycle."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Board believes that lowering the ownership threshold for stockholder action by written consent to 10% is unnecessary given the robust stockholder rights and protections already afforded to the Company's stockholders. As noted in the Corporate Governance Highlights section on page 3 of this Proxy Statement, the Company has adopted extensive governance best practices, including majority voting for directors in uncontested elections, annual director elections, a market standard proxy access right, and a stockholder right to call special meetings that uses the same 15% threshold as our written consent right. Additionally, the Company maintains open and regular communication with large and small stockholders, financial analysts and shareholder advisory services about important issues relating to our business and governance and regularly incorporates feedback from those engagements into our governing documents, policies, and practices. Furthermore, the Company has no history of materially modifying stockholder rights without prior robust consultation and engagement with stockholders. In summary, the Board believes the Company's current 15% threshold, particularly when viewed together with our robust corporate governance practices and other stockholder protections, strikes the right balance in providing stockholders with a meaningful right to act by written consent while protecting against potential abuse or misuse of such right and the unnecessary waste of corporate resources that could arise from stockholder actions by written consent in connection with matters that may not be broadly in the best interests of all of our stockholders."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. There are emergency situations where convening a special meeting might take too long or be too difficult, and written consents may be gathered more quickly. Although the company already provides for ownership of 15% of the share capital to call a special meeting, a 10% threshold is considered to be more adherent to best practice. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Hiring Practices Related to People with Arrest or Incarceration Records

Proponent Shareholder: NorthStar Asset Management, Inc. Funded Pension Plan

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges IDEX Corporation to issue a public report assessing its hiring practices concerning individuals with arrest or incarceration records, citing the disproportionate impact of the U.S. criminal justice system on people of color and the economic value of fair chance hiring. With 2.1 million manufacturing jobs projected to remain unfilled by 2030, the proposal argues that tapping into the formerly incarcerated population can help address labor shortages, increase productivity, and reduce recidivism. Highlighting industry peers like Eaton and Xylem, who are members of the Second Chance Business Coalition, the proponent states that inclusive hiring supports both corporate diversity goals and broader economic recovery. The proposal criticizes IDEX's current performance on workforce diversity-only 29.4% of its U.S. workforce is considered diverse, compared to 40% nationally-and emphasizes that fair chance practices can mitigate reputational and legal risks related to discriminatory hiring. The proponent requests that IDEX consult an independent expert to evaluate its practices from a Fair Chance lens and produce a report that reviews compliance, reputational risk, and alignment with its public DEI commitments. The report should be completed within one year and exclude proprietary information.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, citing its repetitive nature-it has been presented at two previous AGMs and received only 18.5% and 16.8% support. IDEX asserts that the requested report is unnecessary because it already implements robust equitable hiring practices, including for individuals with criminal records. The company outlines targeted strategies driven by its "80/20" methodology, focusing on impactful areas such as training HR personnel on bias mitigation, avoiding automatic exclusions based on criminal history, and offering individualized background check assessments. IDEX highlights that 82% of applicants with prior convictions were hired in 2024 and that no criminal history disclosures are required at the application stage. The company also states that it does not use algorithms that penalize employment gaps and is exploring partnerships with fair chance job boards. IDEX asserts that its existing initiatives meet or exceed the proposal's objectives, such as inclusive hiring protocols, DEI training, pay equity reviews, and community-oriented candidate outreach. Therefore, management argues that producing an additional report would be redundant and not a prudent use of resources.

PIRC analysis: The requested report would enhance shareholder understanding of the Company's approach to inclusive hiring, particularly concerning individuals with arrest or incarceration records—a group disproportionately impacted by systemic inequalities. While IDEX outlines several commendable practices to reduce bias in hiring and describes training and policy measures addressing employment barriers, there is limited transparency around measurable goals or outcomes specific to justice-impacted individuals. The Company notes that 82% of applicants with prior convictions were hired in 2024, yet this data point is isolated and unsupported by broader disclosures on programme effectiveness or demographic impact. Furthermore, the Company does not appear to publish sufficient information on how these hiring practices align with its stated diversity and inclusion commitments or how progress is tracked over time. Providing a detailed and independently reviewed report would allow investors to assess both reputational and operational risks, as well as evaluate how IDEX is leveraging fair chance hiring as a tool to expand its talent pipeline and mitigate legal exposure related to discriminatory practices. The request for a report is considered reasonable and a vote for the resolution is recommended.

4.. Amend Articles: Liability of Certain Officers

It is proposed that the Restated Certificate of Incorporation of the company, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation]. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

CoCos are relatively new instruments and there are concerns that CoCos may create a situation which whilst converting some debt to equity actually disincentives equity investors from putting more new funds in the banks via rights issues, due to the dilutive effect of the conversion taking away much, or some, of the premium that would ordinarily accrue to shareholders. Recent events at Deutsche Bank has led to others voicing their concerns about the destabilizing effect of CoCos on both the CoCo price and the share price.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Approval Requirement for Excessive Golden Parachutes

Proponent's argument Shareholders request that the Board seek shareholder approval of any senior manager's new or renewed pay package that provides for severance or termination payments with an estimated value exceeding 2.99 times the sum of the executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal only applies to Named Executive Officers. Shareholders argue the following: "The Board shall retain the option to seek shareholder approval after material terms are agreed upon. Unfortunately some companies only limit cash golden parachutes to the 2.99 figure which means that there is no limit on noncash golden parachutes for which shareholders have no voting power. This proposal is relevant even if there are current golden parachute limits. A limit on golden parachutes is like a speed limit. A speed limit by itself does not guarantee that the speed limit will never be exceeded. Like this proposal the rules associated with a speed limit provide consequences if the limit is exceeded. With this proposal the consequences are a non-binding shareholder vote is required for unreasonably rich golden parachutes."

Company's response The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The proposal would put the Company at a competitive disadvantage by limiting the Company's ability to attract, retain, and motivate key talent. The Company competes for talented employees across a mix of businesses and industries around the world, and each element of our compensation program is designed to remain competitive to attract, retain, and motivate talented NEOs. Under the proposal, compensation arrangements would be subject to a stockholder vote, and talented candidates may be unwilling to join the Company without certainty that their compensation would be approved by the Company's stockholders and they may instead seek employment elsewhere. [...] We believe that our Compensation Committee, which consists solely of independent directors, is in the best position to design and oversee executive compensation programs that align the interests of our NEOs and stockholders. It is important for the Compensation Committee to retain the ability to responsibly and flexibly adjust, assess, and approve compensation structures consistent with relevant peer group practices. Implementation of this proposal would create unnecessary restrictions on the Compensation Committee's ability to exercise judgment in making timely decisions regarding management succession, talent planning, strategic opportunities, and general oversight of the Company's compensation programs. The Company's current compensation policies, structured by the Compensation Committee and informed by the annual Say on Pay vote, will best serve the interests of the Company and its stockholders."

PIRC analysis: Change-in-control clauses are seen as anti-takeover measures which can be used to entrench under-performing management in the event of a hostile takeover and the company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact, ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). On the contrary, this proposal is considered to be an advance in corporate governance, as it will allow to reduce the gap between shareowners and management.

Changes proposed: i) Increase of the maximum opportunity for the Annual Bonus from 200% of the salary to 300% of the salary, ii) Increase of the maximum opportunity for the LTIP award from 500% of the salary to 800% of the salary for the CEO and from 300% of the salary to 500% of the salary for the CFO and iii) Increase of the shareholding guidelines from 500% for the CEO and 300% for the CFO to 1000% for the CEO and 400% for the CFO.

The LTIP scheme is the use of non-financial performance metrics as a means of assessing individual performance. The use of non-financial conditions enables the policy to focus on the operational performance of the business as a whole as well as the individual roles of each of the executives in achieving that performance. Maximum potential awards for both the Annual Bonus and LTIP are clearly stated. Vesting scales are considered to be sufficiently broad and geared towards better performance. Total potential awards capable of vesting under the policy exceed the recommended threshold of 200% of the highest paid Director's base salary. Directors are required to build a holding equivalent to at least 200% of salary, over a period of no more than five years. It is considered that a shareholding policy aligns the interests of the Executive to that of the shareholder. The Annual Bonus is deferred. Claw-back provisions are attached to the annual bonus. The deferral period attached to the Annual Bonus is in line with best practice as half of the bonus is deferred in shares over at least two years. The performance period for the LTIP is less than five years and is therefore not considered sufficiently long-term. Claw-back provisions are in place over long-term incentive plans. However, recipients of the award are required to hold their vested shares for at least a further two years, which is welcomed.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Equitable Voting Rights

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that UPS amend its governing documents to ensure all outstanding shares carry equal voting rights. It highlights that UPS currently maintains a dual-class share structure, where certain shareholders typically current and former employees hold Class A shares with 10 votes per share, while public Class B shares carry one vote per share. The proponent argues this structure undermines democratic shareholder governance, enabling disproportionate control without proportional economic risk. The proposal emphasises how unequal voting dilutes accountability, especially when other shareholder rights such as calling special meetings or acting by written consent are also restricted. It stresses the importance of shareholder equality and growing support for this reform, noting that similar proposals have gained increasing votes in recent years. The proponent frames equal voting rights as essential to restoring a fair voice to all investors and ensuring directors and management remain accountable to the broader shareholder base.

Company's Response: UPS's Board recommends voting against the proposal, defending its dual-class share structure as central to its employee ownership culture. The Board asserts that the structure encourages long-term engagement from current and former employees by granting them enhanced voting rights through Class A shares, which are not publicly traded and are widely held-thereby avoiding power concentration. UPS stresses that no single shareholder or group holds a controlling stake and that any voting power exceeding 25% is automatically curtailed by the company's charter. The company maintains that the dual-class system has supported its historic success while integrating strong corporate governance safeguards such as annual director elections, an independent chair, and board refreshment. UPS also highlights sunset mechanisms that reduce Class A shares over time, ensuring eventual simplification of the capital structure. The Board argues the current model promotes long-term stakeholder value and that shareholders have repeatedly rejected similar proposals, reaffirming their confidence in the existing arrangement.

PIRC analysis: It is considered that the existing class structure treats the majority of shareholders inequitably: the principle of one-share-one-vote is considered to be best practice and voting rights should be allocated equitably. Support is recommended.

Proponent Shareholder: The National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that UPS produce a report analysing the risks arising from its voluntary carbon-reduction commitments, especially relating to Scope 1, 2, and 3 greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions. The proposal argues that such voluntary climate-related disclosures expose the company to potential regulatory, legal, and reputational risks, especially in light of increased enforcement activity by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) targeting ESG-related disclosures. It asserts that Scope 3 emissions, in particular, are complex and external to the company's direct operations, making their inclusion in voluntary commitments problematic. It references enforcement actions against investment firms over ESG misrepresentations and argues that UPS's reporting lacks clarity regarding the technological or financial feasibility of meeting its long-term sustainability goals. The proposal notes that there is no global scientific consensus supporting the feasibility of achieving net zero emissions by 2050, citing a 2023 report by the Global Climate Intelligence Group which claims there is "no climate emergency." Citing the risk of "greenwashing," the proponent urges UPS to exercise greater caution and transparency in setting and communicating environmental targets. A vote for the resolution is encouraged to protect shareholder value from ESG-related liabilities and regulatory scrutiny.

Company's Response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that UPS already provides comprehensive, transparent sustainability disclosures through numerous channels, including its annual sustainability report and reports aligned with frameworks such as the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI) and CDP. UPS asserts that it does not have a net-zero goal but aims to be carbon neutral by 2050. The company argues that its emission-reduction strategy is grounded in fiscal responsibility and sound engineering principles and that its goals are operationalised through initiatives such as fleet electrification, renewable fuels, and network innovation. Oversight is provided through multiple independent board committees including the Risk Committee and Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee. The company notes its approach includes robust internal controls, third-party assurance on sustainability disclosures, and stakeholder engagement to address progress and risks. UPS contends that the requested report would duplicate existing disclosures and impose an unnecessary burden without providing additional meaningful insights. It reaffirms its commitment to long-term value creation and sound environmental strategy management and concludes that its current approach is sufficient to meet stakeholder expectations and regulatory standards. Accordingly, the Board believes the proposal is unnecessary and recommends a vote against it.

PIRC analysis: The requested disclosure on the risks arising from voluntary carbon-reduction commitments appears to be a spoiler resolution designed to pre-empt or discourage shareholders from filing resolutions aligned with net-zero or emissions-reduction objectives. While framed as a call for transparency, the proposal emphasises executive caution over decarbonisation efforts, with the apparent intent of introducing skepticism toward corporate climate goals. Rather than supporting accountability and alignment between stated commitments and operational practices, the resolution focuses on undermining the rationale for voluntary targets by casting doubt on the feasibility or legitimacy of climate science. The proposal does not support transparency over climate-related risks in a constructive manner and risks distracting from legitimate concerns around the financial and reputational consequences of climate inaction. Furthermore, the company's existing disclosures on emissions reductions and climate-related risks already provide shareholders with a basis to assess progress and alignment. Therefore, the proposal is not considered to be in the interests of long-term shareholders or aligned with broader stakeholder expectations regarding climate action. Opposition is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Transparency in Political Spending

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Cadence Design Systems publish a semiannual report disclosing its policies and expenditures related to political spending, including indirect contributions to trade associations, Super PACs, and 501(c)(4) organisations. The proponent argues that undisclosed political spending may pose reputational and financial risks, particularly when funds support causes or candidates misaligned with the company's publicly stated values on issues such as sustainability and social responsibility. Increased transparency would allow shareholders to assess whether political contributions align with corporate priorities. Referencing shareholder surveys and best practices from peer companies, the proponent stresses that transparency enhances investor confidence and strengthens corporate governance. Without such disclosure, shareholders are unable to assess whether political spending is being carried out in a responsible and aligned manner, especially when funds may flow through opaque intermediaries. The proposal does not target lobbying expenditures but focuses specifically on election related political activity.

Company's Response: Cadence's Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that it is unnecessary and offers limited value given the company's current practices. Cadence asserts that it has not made any political contributions since at least 2018, a fact disclosed in its annual ESG reports and its U.S. Political Activities Policy. The company affirms that any future political donations would require pre-approval from the General Counsel and be subject to oversight by the Corporate Governance and Nominating Committee. It further notes that existing U.S. election laws require disclosure of corporate political contributions, and that such information is already publicly accessible through government and third-party databases. Cadence argues that the requested report could be misleading by potentially characterising trade association dues as political expenditures, despite such dues often funding non-political activities. The Board concludes that compiling the report would not provide material benefit to shareholders and would divert resources unnecessarily given Cadence's current stance of non-contribution and existing governance controls.

PIRC analysis: Political spending is a distinct issue from lobbying and should be addressed with dedicated, transparent disclosures. While Cadence asserts that it has not made political contributions in recent years, this does not substitute for systematic, company controlled reporting of policies, oversight processes, and potential future expenditures. Public databases maintained by regulators are fragmented, retrospective, and do not provide shareholders with comprehensive or easily accessible insights. Transparent disclosure on the company's website would enhance accountability and guard against reputational risk, particularly if funds were to be routed through trade associations or 501(c)(4) entities that support contentious political causes. Establishing clear procedures for oversight and reporting of political activity also strengthens internal governance and investor trust. The request for a report is considered reasonable and well aligned with evolving best practices. Support is recommended.

CAPITAL ONE FINANCIAL CORPORATION AGM - 08-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Golden Parachute Arrangements

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Capital One amend its governance documents to require a non-binding shareholder vote on any new or renewed senior executive pay arrangements that provide severance or termination payments exceeding 2.99 times the sum of base salary and target bonus. This threshold is in line with long-standing market concerns about "golden parachute" packages that are perceived as excessive or misaligned with shareholder interests. The proponent emphasises that the proposal applies only to Named Executive Officers and excludes standard benefits such as life insurance or previously earned deferred compensation. It is structured to impose no cap on long-term equity pay and would not limit the Company's ability to attract or retain talent. Rather, it seeks to introduce a shareholder check on unusually large payouts that could be triggered during termination or change of control. The proposal notes prior support for similar measures at companies like FedEx, Alaska Air, and AbbVie, with votes ranging from 51% to 65%. It argues that Say-on-Pay votes do not provide sufficient visibility into specific severance terms and that this additional vote would increase accountability without disrupting compensation practices.

Company's Response: Capital One's Board recommends a vote against the proposal, asserting that the Company's severance and change-of-control arrangements are already reasonable, market competitive, and subject to robust governance and regulatory oversight. The Company argues that it uses double-trigger mechanisms in its change-of-control agreements-requiring both a qualifying termination and an actual change of control-to avoid misalignment of incentives. Equity awards, which may vest upon such events, are standard elements of pre-approved compensation programs. The Board contends that the proposed shareholder vote would add unnecessary administrative burden, potentially harm the Company's competitiveness in attracting executive talent, and deviate from industry norms. It emphasises that executive severance arrangements are overseen by the Compensation Committee and reviewed case-by-case, with input from independent advisors. Furthermore, the Board highlights that shareholders already have effective oversight via Say-on-Pay votes and public disclosure of termination packages. In recent years, over 93% of shareholders have approved the Company's executive compensation. Based on this context, the Board concludes that the proposal is unnecessary and not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: Change-in-control clauses and excessive severance packages are often viewed as mechanisms that can entrench underperforming management and misalign executive incentives with shareholder interests, particularly in the context of potential takeovers. The company's argument that requiring shareholder approval for such packages would undermine its competitiveness is not compelling. In many developed markets, including France and Italy, shareholder ratification of severance agreements is a common governance practice and has not impeded talent recruitment. This proposal does not seek to limit executive pay but introduces a shareholder check when severance exceeds a generous multiple of salary and bonus. It reinforces accountability and narrows the gap between shareholders and management decision making on termination terms. As such, the proposal represents an improvement in corporate governance. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Recoupment of Bonuses

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to "amend the Company Policy on recoupment of incentive pay to apply to each Named Executive Officer and to state that conduct or negligence – not merely misconduct – shall trigger mandatory application of that policy. Also the Board shall report to shareholders in each annual meeting proxy the results of any deliberations regarding the policy, including the Board's reasons for not applying the policy after specific deliberations conclude, about whether or not to cancel or seek recoupment of unearned compensation paid, granted or awarded to NEOs under this policy."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "SEC rules already include requirements to provide adequate disclosure about how we apply our Clawback Policy. For example, if the Company is required to claw back compensation from our Named Executive Officers as a result of a financial statement restatement, the Company is required to disclose in its next annual meeting proxy statement specific information about how it applied the Clawback Provisions, including the date of and amount of erroneously awarded compensation attributable to the accounting restatement, any estimates that were used in determining the amount, and the amount that remains to be collected or that is not being collected. If the Company is required to prepare an accounting restatement but concludes that recovery of erroneously awarded compensation is not required under the Clawback Policy, the Company is required to briefly explain why application of the Clawback Policy resulted in this conclusion."

PIRC analysis: While the proposal would require recoupment of remuneration under slightly broader circumstances than are typically included in the most common claw-back policies, the fact that the company does not have any claw-back provisions - policies that have been widely adopted despite the SEC's failure to promulgate any final rulemaking on the issue - is of sufficient concern that support for the proposal be recommended. The proposal will be an advance in corporate governance. On this basis, support for the proposal is recommended.

PROLOGIS INC AGM - 08-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls for amending Prologis' governing documents to allow shareholders holding 10% of outstanding common stock-or the lowest percentage permissible under state law-to call a special shareholder meeting. The proponent argues that this would provide shareholders with a meaningful mechanism to prompt Board responsiveness, especially in urgent or underperforming situations. He contends that the existing shareholder right is constrained and insufficiently robust to act as a deterrent against Board complacency or management inaction. The proposal further highlights a recent trend of companies introducing exculpation clauses limiting director liability, making strong shareholder rights more essential. It argues that virtual meeting technologies have made special meetings more accessible and less costly, thus increasing the feasibility of lowering barriers to call such meetings. Ultimately, the resolution positions this governance change as a necessary update to reinforce shareholder engagement and accountability.

Company's Response : Prologis' Board recommends voting "AGAINST" the proposal, stating that the requested change is unnecessary and duplicative. In February 2025, the Board proactively amended the company's bylaws-after direct engagement with shareholders-to lower the threshold for calling a special meeting from 50% to 20%, a level below the 25% most common among S&P 500 companies. The Board emphasises that this decision was informed by feedback from shareholders representing 42% of outstanding shares, many of whom expressed that a 10% threshold would be too low given the company's ownership structure. Notably, the revised policy does not include a holding period, offering added flexibility. The Board maintains that the 20% threshold strikes a fair balance between shareholder empowerment and protection against misuse by shareholders pursuing narrow, short-term interests. It views the proposal as redundant and believes existing governance practices already fulfill the proponent's objectives.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

5. Shareholder Resolution: Supply Chain GHG Emissions and Net Zero Goals Report

Proponent: Green Century Capital Management

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that Ford, at reasonable expense and omitting proprietary information, issue a report describing if and how it plans to align its supply chain GHG emissions reduction strategies with its net zero goals. Shareholders argue the following: "The essential purpose of this proposal is for Ford to produce forward-looking disclosures demonstrating whether its existing policies and actions are aligned with its net zero goals, and if not, to provide additional strategies, metrics, and milestones necessary for achieving them. In developing the disclosures, proponents recommend, at management discretion: Taking into consideration approaches used by advisory groups such as the Science Based Targets initiative, Transition Plan Taskforce, ResponsibleSteel and SteelZero; Describing how Ford intends to meet its commitment to purchase at least 10% near-zero carbon steel by 2030; and Analyzing the financial and climate-related impacts on Ford's business of a range of low-carbon steel adoption scenarios."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The Board argues the following: "Ford is committed to making a positive contribution to society and the environment-to help build a better world, where every person is free to move and pursue their dreams. This goal is the driving force behind our commitment to reach carbon neutrality no later than 2050, backed by science-based targets, by focusing on three areas that account for approximately 95% of our CO2 emissions [...] Ford provides transparency about its supply chain GHG emissions reduction efforts and other sustainability efforts in various reports, including its annual Integrated Sustainability and Financial Report, that provide detailed and meaningful information about the Company's efforts to achieve carbon neutrality in its supply chain and progress against its targets. [...] Suppliers must establish science-based GHG reduction targets, action plans, and transparent reporting mechanisms to support carbon neutrality by 2050 globally (all scopes), and for sites shipping to Europe, by 2035 (Scope 1 and 2). Ford requires its suppliers to adopt and enforce a similar code of practice and expects their subcontractors to do the same. [...] The Board of Directors does not believe that preparing the requested reporting on the Company's supply chain GHG emissions reduction strategy beyond what the Company already reports is an efficient use of Company resources in light of the Company's existing public disclosure regarding actions the Company has taken and intends to continue taking with respect to supply chain GHG emissions reductions".

PIRC analysis: Most investors accept the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) recommendations that net emissions of carbon dioxide must fall by 45% by 2030 and reach 'net zero' by 2050 to maintain warming below 1.5 degrees Celsius and that these goals must be integrated into business planning decisions. Comprehensive reporting on climate impacts is in shareholders' interests both as a means of informing them of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, of strategies put in place to manage those risks and opportunities, and of the evaluation of the potential impact of different scenarios, including a 1.5 degrees Celsius scenario, on their businesses, strategy, and financial planning.

This level of potential reward is considered excessive, significantly exceeding PIRC's threshold of 200 percent. The Board proposes the approval of a new long-term incentive plan (LTIP) under which employees and executives will be awarded options or rights to receive shares, vesting after three years from the date of award. While the company has clarified that the LTIP will operate within the bounds of the approved remuneration policy, including performance metrics and award limits, and that participants will receive a mix of performance shares and restricted shares, concerns remain. Specifically, the performance conditions attached to these awards are not fully quantified or clearly disclosed. This lack of transparency undermines the ability of shareholders to assess the rigour of the performance framework and to hold executives accountable for the outcomes. Without full disclosure of measurable targets, there is a risk that significant awards may be delivered without sufficiently challenging performance hurdles. Given the continued absence of fully quantified performance criteria, and the potential for payouts not clearly aligned with shareholder value creation, it is recommended to oppose this resolution.

4. Approve Remuneration Policy

The LTIP scheme is the use of non-financial performance metrics with a weighting of 20% as a means of assessing Group performance. The use of non-financial conditions enables the policy to focus on the operational performance of the business as a whole as well as the individual roles of each of the executives in achieving that performance. Maximum potential awards for both the Annual Bonus and LTIP are clearly stated. The performance metrics are not operating interdependently, such that vesting under the incentive plan is only possible where all threshold targets are met. Vesting scales are considered to be sufficiently broad and geared towards better performance. Total potential awards capable of vesting under the policy exceed the recommended threshold of 200% of the highest paid Director's base salary. Directors are required to build a holding equivalent to at least 400% for the CFO and 500% for the CEO, over a period of no more than five years. It is considered that a shareholding policy aligns the interests of the Executive to that of the shareholder. The Annual Bonus is deferred. Claw-back provisions are attached to the annual bonus. The deferral period attached to the Annual Bonus is in line with best practice as half of the bonus is deferred in shares over at least one year. The performance period for the LTIP is less than five years and is therefore not considered sufficiently long-term. Claw-back provisions are in place over long-term incentive plans. However, recipients of the award are required to hold their vested shares for at least a further two years, which is welcomed.

3. Re-elect John Treharne - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board. Designated non-executive director workforce engagement and Chair of the Nomination Committee. It would be preferred that companies appoint directors from the workforce rather than designate a non-executive director (NED). Support will be recommended for the election or re-election of designated NEDs provided that no significant employment relations issues have been identified.

Not considered independent as he is the company's founder and previous Chief Executive Officer. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Furthermore, in terms of best practice, it is considered that the Nomination Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 40%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Opposition is recommended.

ARCHER-DANIELS-MIDLAND COMPANY AGM - 08-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that ADM remove the one-year holding requirement currently in place for shareholders to be eligible to call a special shareholder meeting. The proponent argues that the existing rule renders the right to call a meeting effectively meaningless, particularly in urgent circumstances where new or prospective shareholders may wish to address pressing concerns such as poor performance or governance failures. The proposal emphasizes the importance of allowing any shareholder, regardless of holding duration, to help meet the 10% threshold needed to trigger a special meeting. It is suggested that doing so would act as a deterrent to management complacency and provide a mechanism for shareholder-driven accountability. The proponent highlights ADM's long-term share price decline as justification for enabling a faster and more responsive governance tool, asserting that emergencies or continued underperformance may require immediate action. The proposal characterizes the current provision as outdated and overly restrictive, and urges a reform that reflects a more open and responsive corporate governance standard.

Company's Response: ADM's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the existing provision-requiring a shareholder to have held 10% of shares for at least one year-is already more favorable than many peer companies. The Board argues that this requirement balances the right of shareholders to call a special meeting with the need to prevent disruption by short-term investors or those with narrow interests. ADM maintains that special meetings consume substantial resources and should only be triggered by shareholders with a long-term stake in the company. The Board also references robust governance practices already in place, including majority voting, annual board elections, proxy access, and extensive shareholder engagement. The company notes that a similar proposal was overwhelmingly rejected by shareholders in 2022. ADM believes its current policy protects against misuse while still allowing for shareholder input through established channels, and concludes that eliminating the holding period could expose the company to costly distractions that do not serve the interests of long-term investors.

THE KRAFT HEINZ COMPANY AGM - 08-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Recyclability Claims

Proponent Shareholder: Janet Dell from The Last Beach Cleanup

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Janet Dell of The Last Beach Cleanup, raises concerns over Kraft Heinz's use of recycling claims on plastic packaging, arguing they are deceptive and legally questionable. She cites actions by the SEC, California Attorney General, and consumer lawsuits that challenge the legitimacy of recyclable labels like "Store Dropoff," "Check Locally," and "Remove Label for Recycling." These claims, she argues, mislead consumers and are associated with packaging formats rarely recycled in practice. Investigative reports show that plastic waste labeled for store drop-off is often landfilled or incinerated, while "Check Locally" claims misrepresent recycling availability. California has already banned some of these practices. The proposal asserts Kraft Heinz could face reputational and legal risks by continuing to use misleading recyclability and recycled content claims. Therefore, the proponent urges the company to publish a report by December 2025, led by independent, conflict-free experts, to substantiate all such claims on its plastic packaging. This report should include an assessment of associated financial, operational, and reputational risks.

Company's Response: Kraft Heinz opposes the proposal, stating that its current practices already address the concerns raised. The company outlines its internal review process for recyclability claims, overseen by a cross-functional committee including R&D, legal, and labeling experts. Claims are evaluated against legal requirements, including FTC Green Guides and APR standards. The company monitors changing regulations and adjusts its labeling accordingly. Kraft Heinz also collaborates with external partners like Lorax EPI and organisations such as the Circular Action Alliance to improve packaging sustainability. While acknowledging challenges in recycling multi-material plastics, the company highlights efforts to innovate packaging, including transitioning key products to 100% recycled content. Kraft Heinz participates in industry groups like APR, Sustainable Packaging Coalition, and U.S. Plastics Pact to advance the circular economy. The company argues that its current reporting and sustainable packaging strategy already meet the proposal's goals. Therefore, it believes an additional report would not provide meaningful value and would divert resources from ongoing initiatives.

PIRC analysis: Reporting on sustainability issues is in shareholders' interests both as a means of informing shareholders of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, and as a mechanism to ensure that the board and management take appropriate accountability for environmental impacts. While Kraft Heinz outlines internal processes and partnerships aimed at improving recyclability, its current disclosures lack meaningful, quantifiable information about how much of its plastic packaging is actually recycled or recyclable in practice. There is also no clear articulation of time-bound targets for reducing problematic packaging or ensuring that a majority of packaging meets credible recyclability thresholds. Moreover, public concern and legal scrutiny around misleading recyclability claims indicate that reputational and financial risks are material and growing. As such, the report requested by the proposal would provide critical transparency into the legitimacy of the company's claims and help identify areas for course correction. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Plastic Packaging

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow, on behalf of Helen de Freitas Irrev FBO Roger de Freitas

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Kraft Heinz produce a report evaluating how it could address its use of flexible plastic packaging in alignment with the findings of the Pew Charitable Trusts' Breaking the Plastic Wave report or similar authoritative sources. The proposal cites growing global plastic pollution and regulatory risks, including extended producer responsibility laws and plastic bans in multiple jurisdictions. The Pew study finds that recycling alone is insufficient and emphasises the elimination, redesign, and substitution of flexible packaging-the least recyclable format and one used extensively by Kraft Heinz. Despite acknowledging that 13% of its packaging is non-recyclable, mostly flexible plastic, Kraft Heinz has not disclosed a strategy for phasing out these materials. The proposal warns that failing to act could compromise the company's stated goal of achieving 100% recyclable packaging by 2025 and increase its exposure to reputational and regulatory risks. The report should assess potential financial and operational impacts, evaluate alternatives to single-use plastic, and explore collaboration with peers on reusable packaging systems.

Company's Response: Kraft Heinz opposes the proposal, arguing that it is already undertaking meaningful actions to address plastic packaging concerns, including flexible plastics. The company highlights its 2023 commitment to reduce virgin plastic use by 20% by 2030 and details initiatives such as converting products like Kraft Mayo and Crystal Light to more sustainable materials. Kraft Heinz reports that 87% of its global packaging portfolio is recyclable, reusable, or compostable. It also outlines partnerships with groups like APR, CEFLEX, and The Recycling Partnership to design for recyclability and invest in necessary infrastructure. The company stresses the functional importance of flexible plastics in food safety and quality but claims to be designing for future recyclability based on global guidelines. Kraft Heinz supports reusable systems and compostable materials and endorses global policy efforts such as the Business Coalition for a Global Plastics Treaty. The Board argues that producing an additional report as requested by the proposal would not provide significant value and would instead divert management resources from ongoing sustainability initiatives.

PIRC analysis: Reporting on sustainability issues is in shareholders' interests both as a means of identifying material environmental risks and opportunities and as a tool for ensuring board-level accountability. Although Kraft Heinz outlines various packaging initiatives and partnerships to reduce plastic use and improve recyclability, its current reporting does not offer sufficient transparency on the specific challenges and strategies related to flexible plastic packaging. This type of packaging is acknowledged by the company as largely non-recyclable, yet remains a substantial part of its portfolio. The proposal seeks disclosure aligned with the Pew Charitable Trusts' Breaking the Plastic Wave report, which advocates a reduction-first approach that extends beyond incremental recyclability. Given the scale of environmental and regulatory risks linked to flexible packaging, and the lack of clarity on how Kraft Heinz will meet its 2025 recyclability goal, the requested report appears necessary to evaluate current progress, shortcomings, and future options. Support is recommended.

Proponent Shareholder: The Accountability Board, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls on Kraft Heinz to adopt a formal policy-along with any necessary by-law amendments-to require that the Chair of the Board be an independent director. Citing repeated reversals in the company's board leadership structure, the proposal raises concerns over governance stability and accountability. Over recent years, the company shifted from having an independent Chair to combining the roles of CEO and Chair, then back again. The proponent argues that this inconsistency undermines investor confidence and reinforces the need for a clearly defined governance structure. The resolution notes that an independent Chair acts as a check on management influence and is a recognized governance best practice supported by firms like ISS. The proponent believes now is an opportune time to formalize this structure, given the roles are presently separated, thereby institutionalizing a firewall between board oversight and executive operations to support long-term shareholder value.

Company's Response : Kraft Heinz opposes the proposal, stating that its Board should retain flexibility to choose the most effective leadership structure at any given time. The company stresses that its current governance framework-including annual evaluations, the appointment of a Lead Independent Director, and multiple independent board committees-ensures robust oversight regardless of the Chair's independence status. Kraft Heinz explains that changes to its leadership structure in recent years, such as separating the CEO and Chair roles in 2023, followed detailed Board evaluations based on prevailing circumstances. The company notes that a permanent requirement for an independent Chair would be unduly restrictive and out of step with market practice, citing data that only 39% of S&P 500 companies have an independent Chair. It highlights the important role of the Lead Director, whose duties include chairing meetings without management, overseeing CEO evaluation, and engaging with shareholders. The Board argues that this flexible structure, complemented by strong governance practices and regular shareholder engagement, is more effective than imposing a one-size-fits-all policy.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. TERADYNE INC. AGM - 09-05-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Political Donations

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls on Teradyne to adopt enhanced transparency measures regarding political contributions made with corporate funds. The proposal seeks a semiannual report detailing the company's policies and procedures for direct or indirect political spending and disclosing recipients and decision-makers. While the proponent acknowledges that lobbying is not within the scope of the resolution, the stated concern lies in undisclosed electoral spending through third-party entities, including trade associations and 501(c)(4) "social welfare" organisations. The proposal suggests that such undisclosed contributions can result in reputational and financial risks if they conflict with Teradyne's publicly stated values or positions, such as those on climate or sustainability. Referencing public polling that indicates shareholder preference for transparency in political spending, the proponent emphasises the importance of shareholder oversight in safeguarding corporate value and alignment with stakeholder expectations. Citing other publicly traded peers that provide such disclosures, the proponent urges Teradyne to meet evolving governance standards and proactively protect its reputation through public accountability. A vote for the proposal is urged as a means of protecting the company's long-term interests and supporting transparent, responsible governance.

Company's Response: The Board opposes the proposal, stating that Teradyne already prohibits political contributions using corporate funds, as codified in its publicly available Code of Conduct. According to the company, it does not support candidates, parties, political committees, or independent expenditures and does not operate a political action committee. Teradyne also neither encourages nor discourages individual political contributions by employees. The company notes that its limited policy-related expenditures are confined to memberships in trade organisations that represent the technology sector, with a focus on issues such as export controls, trade, and semiconductor industry initiatives. While acknowledging that such organizations may engage in lobbying, Teradyne highlights that it may not always align with every policy stance but participates for the broader industry benefit. The company states that disclosures regarding these memberships and their lobbying components are already made available via opensecrets.org and the company's Corporate Social Responsibility Report. The Board asserts that an additional semiannual report would provide little incremental value to shareholders and could be costly. On this basis, the Board concludes that the proposal is unnecessary and recommends a vote against it.

PIRC analysis: The transparency and completeness of the company's reporting on political spending could be improved. The board's argument makes clear that its compliance with political spending disclosure regulations complies only with the minimum requirements: this is considered incomplete and insufficient. Moreover, it is to the benefit of the company and its shareholders to be open about political spending and so avoid any suspicion and any damage that may cause to the company's reputation, that the company may be using shareholders' funds in an inappropriate way to gain undue influence. The request for a report is considered reasonable and a vote for the resolution is recommended.

14.. Shareholder Resolution: Nuclear power for Sunndal Verk

Proponent Shareholder: Ivar Sætre

Proponent's argument: The shareholder, Ivar Sætre, proposes that Norsk Hydro ASA investigates the feasibility of establishing a Small Modular Reactor (SMR) to supply electricity to the Sunndal aluminum plant. Sætre supports this proposal by highlighting Hydro Aluminium's extensive power consumption at Sunndal Verk—approximately 6–7 TWh annually, equivalent to 4–5% of Norway's total hydropower production. With existing production in the area only covering 3 TWh, the remainder must be imported, raising sustainability and energy efficiency concerns. As long-term electricity contracts are set to expire around 2030, the shareholder urges consideration of alternative, locally-sourced power generation. Sætre proposes an SMR of 300 MW capacity, capable of generating 2.5 TWh/year, suggesting the reactor could be housed within a mountain hall to limit environmental impact. He contends this would reduce the burden on national energy infrastructure and enhance grid stability, while aligning with national energy security objectives. References are made to public letters and articles advocating nuclear solutions for Sunndal, asserting the proposal aligns with long-term sustainable energy ambitions.

Company's Response : Norsk Hydro's Board of Directors recommends voting against the shareholder's proposal, citing that nuclear power—including SMRs—is not aligned with the company's current strategic framework. Hydro's 2030 strategy emphasises opportunities arising from the green transition, with specific focus on aluminum recycling, extrusion, and expansion of renewable energy generation, particularly onshore wind and hydro upgrades. The company underscores that its capital allocation prioritises technologies deemed cost-efficient and within existing areas of expertise. Establishing an SMR would involve high development costs, significant subsidies, and regulatory complexity, all of which lie outside Hydro's operational scope and ambitions. The board also reinforces its commitment to good corporate governance principles, stating that strategic direction lies within its purview. Therefore, the company does not support this nuclear-based alternative at present and advises shareholders to vote against the proposal.

PIRC's Recommendation: The proposal requests that the company investigate the potential for establishing a Small Modular Reactor (SMR) to supply electricity to its Sunndal aluminium plant. It does not call for immediate development but for an assessment of feasibility, in light of the plant's high and continuous power demand, and upcoming contract renewals. A local, stable, low-carbon energy source could support both decarbonisation and energy security goals. While the company argues nuclear is outside its current strategy, this does not preclude the value of strategic evaluation. Support is recommended.

15.. Shareholder Resolution: Investigate Involvement in Nuclear Power

Proponent Shareholder: Albert Berveling Proponent's argument: The shareholder proposes that Norsk Hydro ASA investigate the potential for involvement in nuclear power to ensure a future energy portfolio that is predictable, sustainable, and profitable. He expresses concern that Hydro's current Norwegian power portfolio - 19 TWh, including 9.4 TWh from its own hydropower - may be insufficient in volume and stability to meet future demands driven by expanded electrolysis capacity and CO capture initiatives. Current power purchase agreements (PPAs), he argues, are increasingly short-term, limited in volume, and heavily reliant on hydro and wind. In the context of rising electricity demand and growing reliance on non-regulated power production in Norway and Europe, the shareholder predicts rising and unpredictable PPA costs. Nuclear power, particularly Small Modular Reactors (SMRs), could offer a stable and strategic energy component. He further criticises wind power on sustainability grounds, citing a recent article claiming comparable CO footprint to gas power, undermining Hydro's low-carbon profile. Therefore, the shareholder urges the company to assess involvement in nuclear, particularly SMRs near high-consumption sites, to secure long-term electrolysis viability. Company's Response : The Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that nuclear power lies outside Hydro's strategic priorities. Hydro's 2030 roadmap is rooted in capitalising on opportunities from the green transition, especially in aluminium recycling, extrusion, and renewable energy such as onshore wind and hydropower. The company is actively pursuing decarbonisation, nature-positive operations, and a just transition, while shaping the greener aluminium market. Within this framework, Hydro is focused on cost-efficient, scalable energy solutions aligned with its internal competencies and existing assets. According to the Board, developing nuclear capabilities, including SMRs, would require major financial investment, regulatory framework development, and subsidies, elements that do not fit Hydro's current strategy or investment philosophy. The Board reaffirms that strategic direction is the responsibility of the Board and recommends that shareholders reject the proposal. PIRC's Recommendation : The proposal seeks an investigation into Norsk Hydro's potential involvement in nuclear power to strengthen the long-term stability and sustainability of its energy portfolio. The shareholder highlights concerns around rising PPA prices, short-term contract structures, and the sustainability of wind power. While the company states nuclear falls outside its current strategy, the request is only for a feasibility assessment - not development, and reflects the importance of energy diversification for future industrial resilience. Support recommended.

3. Consultative Vote on the Remuneration Report 2024

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, being under 200% of the fixed salary. There are claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is welcomed. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. On balance, abstention is recommended.

ABBVIE INC AGM - 09-05-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Simple Majority Voting

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges AbbVie to amend its charter and bylaws to replace all supermajority voting requirements-whether explicit or implicit under state law with a simple majority standard. He argues that shareholders prefer strong governance practices and that supermajority rules, such as those in place at AbbVie, entrench management and reduce responsiveness to shareholder concerns. Citing academic research by Bebchuk, Cohen, and Ferrell, the proposal highlights that supermajority provisions are among six mechanisms that can harm firm performance. Despite receiving 95% shareholder support for similar proposals on five occasions since 2018, these initiatives have failed to be enacted due to AbbVie's 80% approval threshold for outstanding shares. The proponent criticises the company's inaction and questions the role of the Corporate Governance Committee and its legal counsel, Skadden, in failing to operationalise these repeatedly supported changes. He suggests that convening adjourned meetings to meet the voting threshold or assigning Skadden a mandate to implement the proposal could remedy the situation. The proposal emphasises that AbbVie scores poorly (9/10, with 10 being worst) on shareholder rights and argues that adopting a simple majority vote would significantly enhance corporate democracy and investor value.

Company's Response: The company opposes the shareholder proposal on the grounds that it is redundant and ineffective. The Board notes that it has itself submitted a management proposal on the same topic-eliminating supermajority voting requirements-which has been brought to shareholders in multiple previous years. The Board emphasises that only the management proposal, which requires the support of 80% of outstanding shares, can legally change the charter and bylaws. The shareholder proposal, while advisory, has no binding effect. The company highlights its consistent commitment to eliminating supermajority provisions, pointing to related proposals made between 2018 and 2024. Despite repeated shareholder approval, low voter turnout-especially among retail investors-has prevented passage. The Board has considered the use of proxy solicitation campaigns to improve turnout but deemed the cost ($10 million) excessive and the likelihood of success uncertain. AbbVie conducts extensive shareholder engagement covering over 40% of outstanding shares, and feedback suggests such expenses are not justified. The Board reiterates its long-term commitment to removing supermajority requirements and declassifying the board but urges shareholders to support its own binding proposal instead. It recommends a vote against the shareholder proposal, viewing it as ineffective and unnecessary.

PIRC analysis: It is considered to be best practice that shareholders should have the right to approve most matters submitted for their consideration by a simple majority of the shares voted. There are concerns that the supermajority provisions which relate to the company's corporate governance documents could frustrate attempts by the majority of shareholders to make the company more accountable or strengthen the independence of the Board. Support is therefore recommended.

COLGATE-PALMOLIVE COMPANY AGM - 09-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the Board of Directors adopt an enduring policy, and amend the governing documents as necessary in order that 2 separate people hold the office of the Chairman and the office of the CEO as follows: "Selection of the Chairman of the Board the Board requires the separation of the offices of the Chairman of the Board and the Chief Executive Officer. Whenever possible, the Chairman of the Board shall be an Independent Director. The Board has the discretion to select a Temporary Chairman of the Board who is not an Independent Director to serve while the Board is seeking an Independent Chairman of the Board on an accelerated basis. This policy could be phased in when there is a contract renewal for our current CEO or for the next CEO transition. This proposal topic has received up to 47%-support from Colgate-Palmolive shareholders recently. A lead director is no substitute for an independent board chairman. A lead director cannot call a special shareholder meeting and cannot even call a special meeting of the board. A lead director can delegate most of his lead director duties to others and then simply rubber-stamp it. There is no way shareholders can be sure of what goes on. With the current CEO serving as Chair this means giving up a substantial check and balance safeguard that can only occur with an independent Board Chairman."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Our active and independent Board, with our robust independent Lead Director role and independent committee chairs and committees, ensures that the Board, and not the Chairman alone, determines the Board's focus. The Chairman is guided by these strong independent leaders and having our CEO serve as Chairman creates a bridge to management that helps provide the Board with the management support it needs. Having a unified leadership structure is particularly beneficial at this time given the dynamic consumer and retail landscape and rapidly evolving environment in which we compete. Under Mr. Wallace's leadership, and overseen by our strong independent Board, we have delivered strong performance over the short, medium and long term. [...] Based on these considerations, the Board believes that this is the best leadership structure for us at this time and that, operating under this structure, the Board will continue to effectively guide Colgate and represent the interests of our stakeholders. A requirement that the Chairman be an independent director, as the proposal requests, would reduce the Board's ability to act in the best interests of the Company and to respond to the changing needs of the Board and the Company."

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Revisit Plastic Packaging Policies

Proponent: National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request the Board to (re-)examine its plastic production and packaging policies in light of non-biased, objectively verifiable, scientifically accurate, and economically thorough research. It would be best if a quantifiable assessment of fact-based potential policy changes versus current practices. Shareholder argue the following: "In recent years activist shareholders have sponsored proposals at various companies that urge them to address an alleged "plastics pollution crisis,"¹ which is primarily blamed on "single-use plastics" (SUPs), whose production is generated from the even more demonized "fossil fuels." Evidence shows these claims are exaggerated, distorted, or false. [...] An SUP-caused pollution "crisis" is a myth. For example, the "Great Pacific Garbage Patch" does not primarily consist of SUPs, but rather 52 percent consists of fishing nets, lines and ropes. SUPs represent a tiny fraction of the problem. Plastic pollution is primarily the result of poor disposal practices, not production."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "We are committed to transparent sustainability reporting, having published an annual sustainability report for more than a decade. The report is currently titled the "Sustainability & Social Impact Report" and is made available on our corporate website. It includes detailed information about our 2025 Sustainability & Social Impact Strategy (including our ambitions, the actions and targets that support our ambitions and our progress against those targets), sustainability governance and stakeholder engagement. In the section of the report entitled "Preserving Our Environment" we elaborate on our plastic production and packaging policies, including our goals, progress against our goals and partnerships. Our existing plastic production and packaging policies are based on objective scientific research and our existing disclosures provide our stockholders the information they need to assess our efforts and progress. Therefore, the re-examination and report requested by the proponent would be an unnecessary use of time and resources without providing any meaningful additional information. Given our existing rigorous processes and public disclosure in this area, the Board does not believe that implementing this proposal would benefit our stockholders."

PIRC analysis: The proponent presents a politically charged counter-narrative that disputes established scientific consensus around plastic pollution, downplaying the role of SUPs in environmental degradation. While the proposal advocates for cost-benefit analysis and claims to support "objectively verifiable" research, it selectively cites sources that align with a deregulatory agenda and disregards the widely recognized lifecycle impacts of plastic use. Conversely, the company has demonstrated a robust and transparent approach to plastic waste reduction, grounded in reputable science and supported by independent partnerships. It provides detailed sustainability disclosures, incorporates material circularity principles, and ties environmental improvements to economic benefits—a practice aligned with shareholder interests and good environmental governance. While scrutiny of environmental claims is legitimate, this proposal appears ideologically motivated and misaligned with best practice standards for ESG oversight. It would duplicate existing processes without offering clear shareholder value.

THE PROGRESSIVE CORPORATION AGM - 09-05-2025

1f.. Elect Lawton W. Fitt - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board and Chair of the Nominating and Governance Committee. The Chair is not considered independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this.

In terms of best practice, it is considered that the Nominating and Governance Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

As the Chair of the Nominating and Governance Committee is considered to be accountable for the Company's sustainability programme, and given the concerns over the Company's sustainability policies and practice.

At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the chair of nomination committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on the Company's LGBTQIA+ Equity and Inclusion Efforts

Proponent's argument: Shareholders of International Paper Company request the Board of Directors to report on the Company's LGBTQIA+ equity and inclusion efforts in its human capital management strategy. In its discretion, the Board may wish to include in the report: whether the company has inclusive nondiscrimination policies or guidelines, the equality and inclusiveness of employee benefits, and the availability of employee support groups. Additionally, it may wish to disclose whether IP collects anonymized sexual orientation and gender identity data to guide talent development, increase productivity, and demonstrate to the market that inclusive teams are serving them. Shareholders argue the following: "Numerous studies have pointed to the benefits of effective workforce management and found that companies can retain employees through inclusive policies. In addition, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce Foundation observed in its 2023 report, Better Business: The Benefits of LGBTQ+ Workplace Inclusion: "Firms with LBTQ+ inclusive practices show positive impact on profitability and market valuation. LGBTQ+ employees are more devoted to their jobs and are more productive in inclusive workplaces."."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "We adhere to the policies outlined in our Code of Conduct, which is publicly available on our website and underscores our mission to cultivate a team-oriented culture. As set forth in our Code of Conduct, we maintain policies that prohibit harassment and discrimination and encourage reporting of any suspected workplace misconduct. Our policies specifically prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, ethnicity, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, age, disability, gender identity or expression, genetic information, national origin, military or veteran status, or any other classifications protected by the laws that apply to us. [...] Lastly, the current presidential administration has indicated aims to end diversity, equity and inclusion practices in the private sector, including those related to LGBTQIA+ initiatives. In particular, the current administration has ordered federal agencies to investigate and take actions against diversity, equity and inclusion practices deemed discriminatory. Producing a dedicated LGBTQIA+ report may be perceived as discriminatory and subject the Company to risk of enforcement and litigation."

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of senior management diversity lie in widening the perspectives on business issues brought to bear on decision-making, avoiding too great a similarity of attitude and helping companies understand their customers, marketplace, supply chain and workforce. Disclosure surrounding senior management's composition allows shareholders to consider this diversity in the context of the long-term interests of the company. Disclosure of a policy to improve diversity and goals that have been set to meet this policy also reassures shareholders that a diverse leadership structure is not just an aspiration but a goal. A vote for the resolution is recommended.

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Under our Corporate Governance Principles, our Board has the freedom to determine the optimal leadership structure for the company, including, when appropriate, separating the roles of Chairperson and Chief Executive Officer, based solely on what it believes is in the best interests of the company and its shareholders. [...] The Board believes that its current best leadership structure strikes an appropriate balance between strong and consistent executive leadership and independent and effective oversight of our company's business at this time and that mandating a fixed and inflexible leadership structure for the company would unduly restrict the Board, would prevent the Board from determining the most appropriate leadership structure for the company and would hinder our Board's effectiveness in guiding our company and representing the interests of the shareholders. Effective corporate governance requires more than just a mechanical, "one-size-fits-all" approach, like that requested by the shareholder proposal."

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the Board of Directors adopt an enduring policy, and amend the governing documents as necessary in order that 2 separate people hold the office of the Chairman and the office of the CEO. Shareholders argue the following: "Whenever possible, the Chairman of the Board shall be an Independent Director. The Board has the discretion to select a Temporary Chairman of the Board who is not an Independent Director to serve while the Board is seeking an Independent Chairman of the Board on an expedited basis. It is a best practice to adopt this policy soon. However this policy could be phased in when there is a contract renewal for our current CEO or for the next CEO transition. The roles of Chairman and CEO are fundamentally different and should be held by 2 directors, a CEO and a Chairman who is completely independent of the CEO and our Company. It is important to have an independent Board Chairman when a company has a history of weak lead directors and is near a critical point in its succession planning. The 2023 Prudential lead director only had academic day job experience for the most important 15-years of her career and also had 15-years PRU Board tenure which is often cited as an impediment to director independence."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argue the following: "The Board believes a clearly defined and significant Lead Independent Director role, active and strong independent committee chairs, and independent-minded, engaged, and committed directors with diverse skills optimally serves the best interests of Prudential's shareholders. The Board's current structure and governance policies allow it to provide effective oversight of management. Our Lead Independent Director is elected annually by independent directors of the Board to serve a term of no longer than three years. In addition, the Lead Independent Director has significant responsibilities that are described in detail in this Proxy Statement, including approval of all Board agendas and information sent to the Board, shareholder engagement, oversight of the annual Board evaluation process by an independent third party, Board refreshment and succession planning, and guiding the Board's overall governance processes. In addition, we have posted videos of two Directors, describing their respective roles on the Board. 4.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, requests that the company amend its governing documents to allow shareholders holding a combined 10% of outstanding common stock to call a special shareholder meeting. The current governance structure lacks a shareholder right to act by written consent, a standard right offered by hundreds of major companies. To compensate for this, the proponent argues that shareholders should have enhanced special meeting rights as a form of check on management. He cites other companies such as Southwest Airlines that permit special meetings at a 10% threshold while also lacking a written consent right. According to the proposal, while the right to call special meetings is rarely exercised, it functions as a vital safeguard against disengaged or unaccountable management. At Xylem, similar proposals in recent years have consistently garnered more than 40% shareholder support, which the proponent argues likely represents a majority of shareholders who receive independent proxy advice. The proposal asserts that modern online meeting platforms reduce the logistical burden of special meetings, making such reforms both timely and practical. The proponent concludes by urging shareholders to vote in favor of this governance enhancement.

Company's Response: The Board recommends voting against Proposal 4, asserting that the current 25% ownership threshold for calling a special meeting offers a balanced approach to shareholder rights and corporate stability. The company adopted this threshold in 2014 after extensive shareholder engagement, with approval from over 80% of outstanding shares. Xylem notes that this threshold aligns with practices among S&P 500 companies and is supported by various institutional investors. Lowering the threshold, the Board argues, could lead to unnecessary expenditures of company and shareholder resources and expose the company to the risk of disruption from narrow interests. Xylem highlights a range of governance reforms implemented over the years, including declassifying the board, introducing proxy access, and allowing shareholders to amend bylaws. The company also underscores its shareholder engagement efforts, ongoing dialogue with top investors, and a governance structure that includes majority voting for directors, independent board leadership, and a prohibition on insider hedging and pledging. The Board believes that these robust governance practices render the proposed changes unnecessary and affirms its belief that the current threshold continues to serve the best interests of all shareholders.

CONOCOPHILLIPS AGM - 13-05-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Remove Emissions Reduction Targets

Proponent: National Legal and Policy Center (NLPC)

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request the Company to remove all emissions reduction targets covering greenhouse gas emissions of the Company's operations and energy products. Shareholders argue the following: "ConocoPhillips's embrace of politically-driven climate alarmism will destroy shareholder resources both in the short and long run. The Company has only two paths to reduce greenhouse gas emissions: investing in carbon capture and storage technology, or reducing oil and gas production. CCS projects are unprofitable without government subsidies, which are unlikely to remain in their current form under the new presidential administration. That leaves the Company with one path: reducing oil and gas investment. ConocoPhillips has always been an oil and gas company; Reducing production would destroy shareholder resources."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "ConocoPhillips continues to be guided by our value proposition of superior returns to stockholders through price cycles while executing against our Triple Mandate, which sets out three objectives to align our actions with the underlying realities of our business and demonstrates our commitment to create long-term value for our stockholders. [...] We regularly meet with stockholders on a variety of topics, including our climate-related risks and associated target framework. In recent years, during these engagements, an overwhelming majority of stockholders have expressed support for our GHG target framework as well as our actions to reduce Scope 1 and Scope 2 emissions. We have had consistent support from stockholders on our approach to target setting, dating back to our first target set in 2017. [...] Our recent acquisition of Marathon Oil fits within our target framework and is fully aligned with our commitment to develop assets that have a low cost of supply and low GHG intensity, as these are most likely to compete in any future energy transition pathway. Because our 2030 targets are set on an intensity basis, we are able to respond to our sector's dynamic business environment where plans, technology, prices, industry structure and costs all change rapidly."

PIRC Recommendation: The proposal reflects an ideological rejection of mainstream climate science and responsible climate governance. Removing emissions reduction targets would significantly undermine the company's ability to manage climate-related financial risk, respond to regulatory shifts, and meet stakeholder expectations-particularly institutional investors increasingly prioritizing climate risk disclosure and mitigation. The proponent fails to provide a credible or constructive alternative to managing GHG emissions, and the argument that climate strategy is purely political is inconsistent with current global regulatory, reputational, and market pressures. ConocoPhillips's framework, while imperfect, represents a pragmatic and shareholder-aligned attempt to navigate energy transition risks. Additionally, the company's use of intensity-based targets allows operational flexibility while encouraging emissions efficiency, which is a widely accepted approach among energy peers.

5. Amend Articles: Limit Liability of Certain Officers

It is proposed that the Restated Certificate of Incorporation of Juniper, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation]. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

These changes are primarily aimed at streamlining and improving the Seventh Amended and Restated Memorandum and Articles of Association (the 'Existing Articles'), adapting them to better suit the needs of a digital era and to ensure they reflect current and best market practice. The proposed changes to the Existing Articles include: (i) updating the notices of general meetings to accommodate for wholly virtual meetings; (ii) removing the requirement for the Chair to be physically present at an annual general meeting; (iii) changes to allow the Board of Directors to adopt a new company name without requiring a shareholder resolution; and (iv) allowing for electronic only account transfers. The New Articles also simplify language for: (i) locating and dealing with untraced shareholders; and (ii) the use of proceeds of sale. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Simple Majority Voting

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, urges the Board to amend all charter and bylaw provisions that currently require more than a simple majority vote, whether explicitly or implicitly by default to state law. He advocates replacing these provisions with a voting requirement based on the majority of votes cast for and against proposals, or the closest legally permissible equivalent. The proposal emphasises that shareholders are willing to pay a premium for firms with superior governance standards. According to research from Harvard Law School, supermajority provisions are among six corporate governance mechanisms that can entrench boards and harm company performance. The proposal contends that these mechanisms can suppress shareholder initiatives that have majority support but face board resistance. Furthermore, Chevedden notes the overwhelming shareholder support received by similar proposals in 2024, which passed with 98% approval at companies including Domino's Pizza, FMC Corporation, ConocoPhillips, Masco Corporation, and Power Integrations. The proponent argues that replacing supermajority requirements with a simple majority standard would enhance transparency, accountability, and responsiveness to shareholder interests. He concludes by encouraging shareholders to vote in favor of improving governance through this standard.

Company's Response: The Board unanimously opposes Proposal 5, stating that it is largely redundant and not in the best interests of shareholders. The company asserts that its current governance framework already reflects high standards of shareholder access, with no supermajority voting requirements in its governance documents, except for the statutory provision under Maryland law requiring a two-thirds vote to remove directors. This legal provision, the Board argues, protects long-term shareholder value against the influence of large, potentially self-interested investors. The company highlights that all directors are subject to annual election and that its annual meetings offer appropriate forums for director accountability. In December 2024, the Board amended its bylaws to permit shareholders to alter bylaws by a simple majority of votes entitled to be cast. The Board believes this provides sufficient governance flexibility and affirms its commitment to continual review and improvement. It emphasises that Proposal 5 is advisory and would not automatically change any voting standards. Concluding, the Board maintains that its existing practices are robust and that additional changes would not benefit shareholders, recommending a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: It is considered to be best practice that shareholders should have the right to approve most matters submitted for their consideration by a simple majority of the shares voted. There are concerns that the supermajority provisions which relate to the company's corporate governance documents could frustrate attempts by the majority of shareholders to make the company more accountable or strengthen the independence of the Board. Support is therefore recommended.

It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. In terms of best practice, it is considered that the Audit, Nomination and Remuneration Committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair. The Chair of the Sustainability Committee is considered to be accountable for the Company's sustainability programme, and the Company's sustainability policies and practice are not considered adequate to minimise the material risks linked to sustainability.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Disclose Plan to Reduce Total Contribution to Climate Change

Proponent: John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that Centene issue a report (at reasonable cost, omitting proprietary information) describing if, and how, it plans to reduce its total contribution to climate change and align its operations and investments with the Paris Agreement's ambition of limiting global temperature rise. Shareholders argue the following: "The health sector accounts for an estimated 8.5% of U.S. carbon emissions.¹ Climate change is expected to increase the cost of healthcare services, making it more expensive for healthcare organizations to operate due to damage to infrastructure, supply chain disruptions, and increased complexity of care. Climate-related health conditions are also expected to increase and drive up the total cost of care, affecting profits for both healthcare systems and plans.² In its 10-K, Centene acknowledges that the "the effects of climate change ... could reduce our ability to accurately predict and effectively control the costs of providing health benefits." Despite acknowledging this risk, the Company has not published GHG or other relevant targets aimed at reducing its emissions. By contrast, peers Cigna, CVS Health, Humana, and UnitedHealth Group have set or committed to set science-based targets with the Science Based Targets initiative. HCA Healthcare aims to reduce its scope 1 and 2 emissions by 2030 in line with 1.5 °C, Elevance Health plans to decrease direct operational emissions by 50% by 2030 and reach net zero by 2050, as well as have 75% of indirect spend suppliers set science-based targets by 2028."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Company's transparency regarding our progress is demonstrated by the fact that our results over the past 5 years have not been uniformly linear. For example, the Company's Scope 3 emissions increased slightly from 2021 to 2022. Nonetheless, the Company's commitment to achieving meaningful reduction of greenhouse gas emissions is clearly demonstrated by our success, achieving Scope 1 reductions of 59%, Scope 2 reductions of 64% and Scope 3 reductions of 57% since 2019. To date, the majority of stockholders have expressed support for the Company's efforts, with approximately 64% of voted shares voting against a similar proposal in 2024. [...] In the near term, we believe that maintaining flexibility to choose from among appropriate sustainability initiatives and the timing for the implementation of those initiatives aligns with the Company's mission to prioritize serving its members and government partners. We are continually assessing the rapidly evolving and uncertain regulatory and political landscape and the priorities of our government partners as we develop our sustainability plans and assess our climate-related risks. We are also mindful of the wide variations in costs associated with this rapidly changing landscape. We hope the meaningful results we have achieved over the past 6 years have earned your continued trust."

PIRC analysis: Most investors accept the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) recommendations that net emissions of carbon dioxide must be halved by 2030 and reach 'net zero' by 2050 to maintain warming below 1.5 degrees Celsius and that these goals must be integrated into business planning decisions, together with short- and medium-term targets for emissions reduction. Comprehensive reporting on climate impacts is in shareholders' interests both as a means of informing them of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, of strategies put in place to manage those risks and opportunities, and of the evaluation of the potential impact of different scenarios, including a 1.5 degrees Celsius scenario, on their businesses, strategy, and financial planning.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Climate Risk to Retirement Investments

Proponent: As You Sow

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request Centene publish a report disclosing if and how the Company is protecting retirement plan beneficiaries - especially those with a longer investment time horizon - from increased future portfolio risk created by present-day investments in high-carbon companies. Shareholders argue the following: "Greenhouse gas emissions and the resulting warming are causing significant, deleterious consequences for the global economy. Those harms are predicted to grow. Prior studies estimate that unmitigated climate change will cut the world economy by $23 trillion by 2050, with climate-related damages already costing the global economy an estimated $16 million per hour. These effects will have a particularly significant impact on workers saving for retirement. Retirement plan beneficiaries have long investment horizons, and "[t]he longer term the investment horizon, the more likely it is that climate will not only be a material risk, but the most material risk." Additionally, climate portfolio risk to retirement plans will be difficult to mitigate. An International Finance Corporation report concludes that "the traditional way of managing risk through a shift in asset allocation into increased holdings of more conservative, lower risk, lower return asset classes may do little to offset climate risks."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The U.S. Department of Labor's investment duties regulation mandates that an ERISA retirement plan fiduciary select investment options, including the default investment option, based on factors the fiduciary "reasonably determines are relevant to a risk and return analysis." The law requires that a fiduciary may not sacrifice the interest of 401(k) plan participants' retirement income or other financial benefits by compromising investment returns or taking on additional investment risks to promote unrelated benefit or goals. The weight given to a risk factor should be based on the facts and a reasonable assessment of its impact on risk and return. In addition, the recent United States federal court decision in Spence vs. American Airlines suggests that considering factors other than investment return, especially ESG factors, are not permissible and a violation of the committee's fiduciary duty of loyalty to plan participants. The impact of this decision is unclear at this time, but it would not be prudent for the Company to take actions that could increase litigation risks against the Company for implementing the request in the proposal. In discharging this fiduciary duty, the investment committee thoughtfully constructs, and closely and regularly monitors, investment options across a variety of different asset classes and investment styles, carefully weighing the potential risks, rewards, and goals for a wide range of employees. We believe this proposal, and the report it requests with its focus on climate risks and carbon emissions is not consistent with this duty. By overlooking the legally-mandated risk and return evaluation of the 401(k) plan, the proposal risks putting undue pressure on the investment committee to make changes that are imprudent or not in the best interests of 401(k) plan participants."

PIRC analysis: It is considered that shareholders should be focused on long-term value creation. Ignoring the potential long-term costs of ignoring climate change as part of the investment strategy of the company's retirement plan is not considered to be in the best interests of its employees. Fossil fuels financing is risky, with records of several human rights and environmental violations and returns that can pay out only years after the initial expensive investment. Although some case studies show that pension funds are getting increasingly involved in the energy transition, most of the financial system as a whole is still oriented mainly towards financing the linear economy when not directly fossil fuel enterprises. Nevertheless, retail investors such as the beneficiaries from the company's retirement plan are increasingly reported to feel that brands have a responsibility to take care of the planet, and UN's Business and Sustainable Development Commission issued a forecast where sustainability is mentioned as to be worth at least USD 12 trillion a year by 2030 to businesses. As such, financing the energy transition could be indeed an opportunity especially for pension funds, where the size of a greener economy (directly related to the availability of financing for those projects) and the long term would meet.

The Board seeks authority to amend the articles to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. The Company's Certificate of Incorporation currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to remove the current provision that considers the voice of certain Advanced Micro Devices shareholders as non-shareholders. Currently all shares not held for one continuous year are considered non-shareholders if they seek to call for a special shareholder meeting on an important matter. Shareholders argue the following: "The current one-year exclusion for all shares held for less than one continuous year makes the current so-called shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting useless. There is no point to have useless right on the books of AMD. The reason to enable all shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting is to allow one shareholder or a group of shareholders to quickly acquire AMD shares to equal the challenging 20% share ownership requirement of all shares outstanding to call for a special shareholder meeting when there is an urgent matter to consider in order to incentivize a turnaround of AMD.

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Company's policies and practices are required to meet stockholder expectations relating to current issues or emerging trends. Our existing governance policies provide stockholders with numerous avenues to address and discuss our business and governance policies with the Board, and demonstrate our responsiveness and willingness to engage with stockholders and provide them with a meaningful voice. For instance, our bylaws provide a proxy access right permitting certain of our stockholders who have beneficially owned 3% or more of our common stock continuously for at least three years to submit director nominations via our proxy materials for up to 20% of the directors then serving. In addition, our bylaws provide for the annual election of directors through simple majority voting. These corporate governance policies provide our stockholders with numerous opportunities to be heard and to engage directly with the Board. In light of these existing opportunities for stockholder engagement, together with the existing right to call a special meeting and the ability to act by written consent, the Board believes that eliminating the holding period requirement as requested by the proposal would not make a meaningful difference in our stockholders' ability to engage with the Board or influence our business or governance policies."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The company adopted a 20% threshold. However it is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Transition Finance Strategy

Proponent Shareholder: Paul Rissman

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Paul Rissman, calls on State Street to publish a report disclosing how it addresses worker transition and community fairness within its transition finance strategy. This includes the risks and opportunities tied to decarbonisation and the human dimensions of that shift. The proposal emphasises the importance of managing labor displacement and community impacts as part of a credible and just climate transition strategy. The supporting statement notes that social resistance has hindered numerous environmental projects and highlights State Street's limited public disclosures regarding Just Transition, despite acknowledging its relevance. It argues that meaningful transition finance should go beyond technical decarbonisation to include provisions like retraining, income support, economic diversification, and respect for human rights. By failing to address these aspects or disclose how such issues are managed, the proposal claims State Street is exposing itself to reputational, operational, and investment risk, particularly as it reduces engagement with climate coalitions like Climate Action 100+.

Company's response: State Street's Board recommends a vote against the proposal, stating that the company does not engage in transition finance and therefore the requested report would not be meaningful. The company distinguishes between its core business activities investment servicing and investment management and traditional transition finance, which involves direct financial support like commercial loans. Since neither State Street nor its asset management arm, State Street Global Advisors (SSGA), provides such financial support, the Board views the proposal as misaligned with its business model. While SSGA may engage in discussions with portfolio companies on environmental topics, such engagement is stewardship focused and does not constitute transition finance. Furthermore, the company stresses that its investment products are client driven, and SSGA's role is not to determine corporate policy but to ensure long-term value through proxy voting and company dialogue. The Board concludes that generating a report on a business activity it does not conduct would be an inefficient use of resources and not in the best interest of shareholders.

PIRC analysis: As a major institutional investor, State Street plays a key role in shaping how capital supports the climate transition. While not a direct provider of transition finance, its stewardship activities influence companies operating in high-risk sectors. Failing to consider the social impacts of the transition on workers and communities can lead to reputational, regulatory, and financial risks. Disclosure on how these risks are assessed and mitigated would strengthen transparency and accountability. Given growing expectations for investor responsibility in this area, support is recommended.

ENPHASE ENERGY INC. AGM - 14-05-2025

1.1. Elect Steven J. Gomo - Senior Independent Director

Senior Independent Director and Chair of the Audit Committee. Not considered independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is considered that a Senior Independent Director should be independent, in order to fulfil the responsibilities assigned to that role, irrespective of the level of independence of the Board.

It is considered that audit committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

At the company, there is no external whistle-blowing hotline. This suggests that such concerns that should be raised by a whistle-blower are dealt with internally, which may increase the risk of such issues not being followed up or escalating to a level where the higher was the level of the misconduct, the more likely is the issue to be concealed. On this basis, and on the potential unforeseeable consequences for the company, opposition is recommended to the re-election of the chair of the audit committee, who is considered to be accountable for the concerns with the whistle-blowing reporting structure.

It is considered that the Chair of the Compensation Committee is responsible for the company's executive compensation, and owing to concerns with the company's executive compensation.

At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the chair of nomination committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure. As the chair of the nomination committee is not up for election, members of the committee are held accountable for this lack of disclosure. The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation.

FISERV INC. AGM - 14-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Improved Clawback Policy

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, urges the Board to adopt an enhanced clawback policy applicable to all Named Executive Officers (NEOs) that mandates recoupment of unearned compensation in cases of either misconduct or negligence. He argues that the current policy focuses primarily on employee misconduct and lacks transparency, as it is difficult to access and unclear in its application. The proponent calls for public disclosure in the proxy statement of any board deliberations on potential clawbacks, including explanations for decisions not to pursue them. He draws attention to Wells Fargo's failure to seek repayment from a negligent CEO despite significant scandals and regulatory penalties, suggesting that similar leniency could occur under Fiserv's current policy. Chevedden notes that executives can currently be rewarded despite negligent oversight, which sends the wrong signal at a time when Fiserv should reinforce accountability. By implementing the proposed policy and making it easily accessible in corporate governance documents, the company would strengthen management responsibility and shareholder confidence. The proposal aims to ensure executives are held to high standards and do not benefit from unearned pay under questionable circumstances.

Company's Response: Fiserv's Board recommends voting against Proposal 4, asserting that the company's existing Compensation Recoupment Policy already satisfies and exceeds the requirements set by the SEC and NYSE. Adopted in 2023, the policy mandates recoupment of erroneously awarded compensation without regard to fault in the event of a financial restatement and extends its reach beyond NEOs to all employees and contractors. The company emphasizes that the policy already allows for discretionary clawbacks in cases of legal or code violations, and that broadening the standard to include vague terms like "negligence" or general "conduct" could create uncertainty and discourage sound executive decision-making. Fiserv also argues that current SEC rules already mandate transparent disclosures about clawback decisions, and further mandatory disclosures could compromise the Board's discretion. The policy is already publicly accessible, including in SEC filings and on Fiserv's website. The Board contends that the proposed changes would not meaningfully enhance shareholder protections and could undermine managerial effectiveness, concluding that the proposal is not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: While the proposal would require recoupment of remuneration under slightly broader circumstances than are typically included in most standard clawback policies, extending to negligence as well as misconduct-the concern lies in the discretion embedded in the company's current approach. Although Fiserv has adopted a clawback policy that complies with recent SEC and NYSE requirements, the proposal highlights legitimate shareholder concerns around the lack of mandatory application in cases of executive negligence and the absence of formalised disclosure around Board deliberations. The additional transparency requested, as well as clearer accountability for executive actions that fall short of misconduct but still harm the company or its reputation, represents a logical and constructive enhancement to existing governance practice. In this context, the proposal would advance corporate governance at Fiserv by strengthening accountability mechanisms and aligning executive incentives more closely with shareholder interests. On this basis, support for the proposal is recommended.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. 4.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent: John chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to remove the current provision that considers the voice of certain Amphenol (APH) shareholders as non-shareholders. Currently all shares not held for one continuous year are considered non-shareholders if they seek to call for a special shareholder meeting on an important matter. Shareholders argue the following: "The current one-year exclusion for all shares held for less than one continuous year makes the current so-called shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting next to useless. There is no point to have useless right on the books of First Solar. The reason to enable all shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting is to allow one shareholder or a group of shareholders to quickly acquire more First Solar shares to equal the challenging 25% share ownership requirement of all shares outstanding to call for a special shareholder meeting when there is an urgent matter to consider in order to incentivize a turnaround of First Solar or adopt a new strategy."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The board of directors recognizes the importance of providing stockholders with the right to call special meetings in appropriate circumstances. Given the size of the Company and our large number of stockholders, a special meeting of stockholders is a significant undertaking that requires a substantial commitment of time and financial resources of the Company. Among other costs, the Company is required to prepare, print, and distribute legal disclosure documents to stockholders, solicit proxies, and tabulate votes for each special meeting called. In addition to the financial burden, special meetings require the board of directors and management to divert significant time, effort, and attention away from management of the Company in order to prepare for, and conduct, the special meeting, detracting from their primary focus of operating our business and maximizing long-term stockholder value. If the one-year holding requirement is eliminated, the Company could thus be subject to regular disruptions by short-term, special-interest stockholder groups with agendas that are not in the best interests of the Company or its broader stockholder base."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The company adopted a 25% threshold. It is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

SOUTHWEST AIRLINES CO AGM - 14-05-2025*4.. Shareholder Resolution: Clawback PolicyProponent Shareholder: Mr. John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that the Board amend Southwest Airlines' clawback policy to ensure it applies not only to "misconduct" but also to "conduct or negligence" by Named Executive Officers (NEOs). This amendment would require that clawbacks be mandatory in such cases and that the policy's application, or decision not to apply it, be reported annually to shareholders, including the rationale for those decisions. The current policy, according to the proponent, is not only inadequate but also lacks transparency and accessibility. Highlighting the Wells Fargo case where the board declined to claw back significant compensation due to a narrow interpretation of executive responsibility the proponent argues that similar risks exist at Southwest. The proposal underscores that executives may retain incentive compensation even in the face of negligence, which could send the wrong message about accountability. This is especially concerning in an environment where robust ethical standards and effective oversight are crucial for long-term shareholder value.

Company's response: The Board of Directors unanimously opposes the proposal, citing several key reasons. Firstly, Southwest Airlines adopted a new clawback policy in November 2023 that aligns with SEC and NYSE regulations and is publicly disclosed. This policy mandates recoupment of erroneously awarded incentive pay following an accounting restatement, irrespective of executive culpability. The Board considers the proposal unnecessary given the policy's compliance and visibility. Secondly, a similar proposal was overwhelmingly rejected by shareholders in 2024, with over 80% voting against. Thirdly, the Board argues the proposed language triggering clawbacks on "conduct or negligence" is overly broad and undefined, potentially chilling prudent business judgment and hindering talent retention. The existing policy ensures clarity and promotes accurate financial reporting without the ambiguities introduced by the proposal. The Board also highlights other mechanisms in place, including a robust Code of Ethics and multiple accountability frameworks, which together serve to uphold corporate integrity and discipline. The Board concludes the proposed changes are impractical and not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: While the Company has adopted a clawback policy compliant with SEC and NYSE regulations, the shareholder proposal highlights a critical shortcoming in its scope. The current policy only mandates recoupment in the event of an accounting restatement, regardless of culpability, but fails to address broader situations where executive conduct or negligence leads to reputational or financial harm without a formal restatement. The proposal would expand the application of the policy to include such instances and mandate greater transparency in its enforcement. This aligns with growing expectations around executive accountability and reflects evolving best practices in corporate governance. Given that the Company's existing framework may not adequately deter negligent behavior or ensure equitable outcomes, the adoption of this resolution would constitute a meaningful governance improvement. On this basis, support is recommended.

VERTEX PHARMACEUTICALS INCORPORATED AGM - 14-05-2025*4.. Shareholder Resolution: Excessive Golden ParachutesProponent Shareholder: Mr. John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal, submitted by John Chevedden, urges Vertex's Board to require a shareholder vote for any senior executive's severance package exceeding 2.99 times the sum of base salary and target bonus. This would apply to Named Executive Officers and be codified within the company's governance guidelines and published on its website. The scope includes cash, equity, and other termination-related benefits triggered by various separation scenarios, excluding pension, life insurance, and pre-earned deferred compensation. The proponent highlights that excessive golden parachutes are a governance concern and should be scrutinised independently, as current "Say on Pay" votes lack granularity to isolate these elements. He emphasises that the proposal does not cap long-term equity compensation or hinder talent acquisition. Instead, it introduces accountability by requiring a non-binding shareholder vote when packages exceed reasonable thresholds. The proposal aligns with evolving governance expectations and references strong shareholder support (51–65%) for similar initiatives at companies like FedEx, AbbVie, and Fiserv. The proposal is framed as a safeguard-much like a speed limit-offering consequence through shareholder feedback rather than banning such payments outright.

Company's Response: Vertex's Board opposes the proposal, asserting that it is unnecessary and could undermine executive recruitment and retention. The company contends its current severance practices, including equity treatment upon termination, are aligned with market standards. It notes that all Named Executive Officers (NEOs), except the CEO, receive severance benefits below the proposed 2.99x threshold. The CEO's package only exceeds this threshold in a change-of-control scenario, which includes pro-rata bonuses and equity acceleration-common practices in competitive markets. The Board stresses that existing shareholder engagement, particularly the annual "Say on Pay" votes, already offers a robust mechanism for expressing concerns. Vertex reports consistent strong support for its executive compensation, with 91% average approval over the past five years. The Board further argues that isolating and regulating a single component of a broader compensation structure risks disrupting the alignment between executive incentives and shareholder value. Given Vertex's achievements, including approvals for transformative drugs like CASGEVY and JOURNAVX, the Board maintains that its compensation program is a critical success factor. It warns that the proposal's implementation could reduce its ability to attract top-tier leadership, impose impractical constraints, and introduce rigidity ill-suited to the dynamic biotech landscape. Accordingly, the Board recommends a vote against the measure.

PIRC analysis: The company's argument that requiring shareholder approval for certain severance arrangements would impair its competitive position is not considered convincing. In fact; ratification of severance agreements or payments is a common governance practice in several developed markets; including France and Italy. Such requirements do not prevent these companies from attracting and retaining talented executives. On the contrary; this proposal is regarded as a positive step forward in corporate governance; as it would strengthen alignment between shareholders and management by ensuring greater accountability and transparency regarding potentially excessive severance payments. By allowing shareholders to have a say in extraordinary severance agreements; the proposal helps mitigate the risk of rewarding failure or misaligned incentives during change of control situations. This enhanced oversight can contribute to better protection of long-term shareholder value. Support is recommended.

SKYWORKS SOLUTIONS INC AGM - 14-05-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Disclosure of Scope 3 Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that Skyworks disclose all material Scope 3 greenhouse gas emissions. In assessing materiality of a potential Scope 3 disclosure, proponents believe the company should examine whether a shareholder may reasonably consider the information important when making an investment or voting decision. Proponents recommend, at the board and management's discretion, that disclosures include consideration of: 1) Guidance in the GHG Protocol's Corporate Value Chain (Scope 3) Accounting and Reporting Standard; and 2) Frameworks, benchmarks and processes developed by credible third parties including The Science Based Targets Initiative, Task Force for Climate-Related Financial Disclosures, and CDP.

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The proposal includes no timeframe, nor does it acknowledge or reference the significant challenges and choices that must be addressed in determining Scope 3 emissions measurement methodologies. If the proposal is intended to be aligned with expected regulatory developments and timelines, then the proposal is redundant and unnecessary, as we plan to comply with these future regulations. If the proposal is not intended to be aligned with, but is meant to suggest that we should measure and disclose emissions in a manner that potentially diverges from, the regulatory disclosure frameworks, then we believe that it is unwise and counterproductive. [...] As part of our stockholder outreach efforts, we have discussed our sustainability program with many of our largest stockholders, including the steps we are taking to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions and to position us to set meaningful greenhouse gas emissions targets. These engagement efforts have allowed us to better understand our stockholders' priorities and perspectives with respect to these initiatives. Based on these engagement efforts, many of our stockholders have recognized our progress and generally support our deliberate and thoughtful approach to these matters. We also have met with the proponent to hear its perspective and share our progress in these areas. Given Skyworks' existing goals, initiatives and disclosures, as well as the evolving Scope 3 emissions landscape, the Board believes the proposal is not in the best interests of the Company's stockholders."

PIRC analysis: Scope 3 emissions (all indirect emissions that occur in the value chain of the reporting company, including both upstream and downstream emissions) can be indicators of exposure to climate risks, such as carbon and energy 'hot spots' in the supply chain or use of products. Although their reporting is not compulsory under the GHG Protocol, they can help companies identify opportunities to create greater efficiencies in their value chains. Quantifying and reporting these emissions is only the first step into building a strategy with targets to reduce Scope 3 emissions. This will allow the company manage risks and opportunities related to the value chain emissions more proactively, including engagement with its value chain on other sustainability issues deriving from this climate-related approach. Support is recommended.

AKAMAI TECHNOLOGIES INC AGM - 14-05-2025

2.. Approval of Third Amendment to the Second Amended and Restated 2013 Stock Incentive Plan

It is proposed to approve a restricted share plan for employees and corporate officers. The Board would receive the authority to set beneficiaries and other conditions. After allotment, shares will be restricted for three years, which is not considered to be sufficiently long term. The Company states that exercise of shares will be based on targets, which at this time remain undisclosed.

Plans to increase employee shareholding are considered to be a positive governance practice, as they can contribute to alignment between employees and shareholders. On the other hand, executives are also among the beneficiaries: it is considered that support should not be given to stock or share option plans that do not lay out clear performance criteria, targets and conditions. On balance, opposition is recommended.

PwC proposed. Non-audit fees represented 13.15% of audit fees during the year under review and 16.84% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than ten years. There are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor.

The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. 8.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to take the steps necessary to amend the appropriate company governing documents to give the owners of a combined 10% of our outstanding common stock the power to call a special shareholder meeting or the owners of the lowest percentage of shareholders, as governed by state law, the power to call a special shareholder meeting. Shareholders argue the following: "A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting, as called for in this proposal, can help make shareholder engagement meaningful. A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting will help ensure that the Akamai Technologies Board and management engages with shareholders in good faith because shareholders will have a viable Plan B by calling for a special shareholder meeting. To guard against the Akamai Technologies Board of Directors becoming complacent shareholders need the ability to call a special shareholder meeting to help the Board adopt new strategies if the need arises. This proposal topic is now more important than ever because there has been a mad rush of Board exculpation proposals to limit the financial liability of directors when they violate their fiduciary duty. This is a disincentive for improved director performance.

A special shareholder meeting can be called to replace a director."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Special meetings are costly, time-consuming and impose other significant burdens on the Company. Our Board believes that allowing owners of 10% of our common stock to call a special meeting of stockholders would be disruptive to our Company's operations, require significant attention from our Board and management and impose substantial administrative and financial burdens on the Company. Providing a special meeting request right at a low threshold of 10%, such as the one proposed in this Proposal 8, risks giving a small number of stockholders a disproportionate amount of influence over our affairs. A higher threshold than the one contemplated by this Proposal 8 also ensures that a more meaningful number of stockholders are seeking to call the special meeting, rather than only one or a few. A failure to receive 25% support to convene a special meeting of stockholders, as proposed in the Company Special Meeting Proposal (Proposal 7), is a strong indicator that the issue is unduly narrow and not deemed critical by our stockholders generally."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The main difference between street name shares and non-street name shares lies in the way they are registered and held, whether under a nominee or directly in the investor's name. This however should not lead to differences in the ability to call for a shareholder meeting. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

3.. Shareholder Resolution: Elect Each Director Annually

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, calls for Universal Health Services (UHS) to reorganise its board so that all directors stand for election annually, replacing the current classified structure in which directors serve staggered three-year terms. He cites research from Harvard Law School identifying classified boards as one of six governance mechanisms that can entrench directors and correlate negatively with company performance. The proposal stresses that annual elections enhance director accountability and empower shareholders to respond more swiftly to underperformance or governance concerns, such as excessive executive pay. The proponent highlights the significant shareholder support this reform has received at other major companies, including Tesla in 2024, and points out that 79 S&P and Fortune 500 companies have adopted this model since 2012. Furthermore, the proposal expresses concern over UHS's controlled company status, noting that insiders control 90% of the voting power despite owning only 16% of common stock, and associates this with UHS's poor governance ratings. The proposal asserts that enhanced board accountability is especially vital under such a voting structure, and urges shareholders to vote in favor of reform to promote long-term shareholder value.

Company's Response: The Board of Universal Health Services recommends a vote AGAINST the proposal, asserting that a classified board structure remains in the best long-term interests of shareholders. The Board believes staggered terms offer stability, continuity, and strategic alignment by ensuring that experienced directors remain in place to manage the company's complex business across evolving regulatory and market conditions. It argues that this structure enables orderly transitions and protects against hostile takeovers by allowing time for thoughtful negotiation and strategic response. The company maintains that its governance framework ensures accountability, highlighting practices such as director self-evaluations, shareholder communication channels, and a majority independent Board despite UHS's controlled company status. The Board also notes that the proposal was rejected by over 90% of votes cast in 2024 and disputes claims that the classified board has led to entrenchment or poor performance. Additionally, the Board emphasises its commitment to diversity and board refreshment, citing that 80% of non-management directors have been replaced in the past seven years and noting the presence of three women on the board, including one from an underrepresented minority. The Board concludes that declassification would undermine the advantages of experience and stability critical to long-term success.

PIRC analysis: The practice of electing different classes of director each year, a classified board, is no longer viewed as best practice as it can be used as an anti-takeover device and could serve to entrench and insulate both underperforming directors and managers. Shareholder concerns in relation to director competence as well as other board issues can more appropriately be raised if all directors face election each year. It is considered that declassification of the board will bring the company in line with best practice, especially given the other practices raised by the Proponent that also insulate the board from shareholders.

For the CFO and Group General Counsel (GGC), the RSP opportunity will rise from 125% to 150%. The minimum shareholding requirement will be raised from 300% to 400% of salary for the CEO, and from 200% to 300% for the CFO and GGC. The Remuneration Committee intends to maintain the current policy of deferring 50% of the annual bonus into shares, but will have the discretion to reduce this to 25% for Executive Directors who have met their minimum shareholding requirement. Overall, disclosure is considered adequate. The CEO's total variable pay could reach 500% of salary, while for other executives it could reach 350%. Half of the annual bonus will be delivered in shares and deferred for three years, though this may be reduced to a 25% deferral once shareholding guidelines are met. The RSP award vests at the end of a three years period in line with market practice, this is not regarded as sufficiently long-term; however, a two-year post-vesting holding period is welcomed. EQUINOR ASA AGM - 14-05-2025

9. Shareholder Resolution: Discontinue the Wind Power Business and Decommission all Wind Power Plants

Proponent:Roald Skjoldheim

Proponent's argument:The proposal requests that Equinor immediately cease all involvement in wind power and decommission its existing wind power plants. The proponent supports this request with a variety of concerns centered on economic inefficiency and environmental harm. Among the claims presented are that wind energy has never yielded profit; that turbines rely on toxic hydraulic oil and glycol; that wind farms cause widespread harm to birds, insects, and ecosystems; and that wind turbine blades contribute to microplastic pollution. The proponent also alleges that wind power is unreliable due to its dependence on fluctuating wind conditions, poses safety risks including fire hazards and mechanical failure, and negatively affects the health of nearby humans and animals. In summary, the argument frames wind power as a failed, dangerous, and environmentally damaging energy source, advocating instead for hydropower as a cleaner and more reliable renewable option.

Company's response: Equinor recommends voting against the proposal, emphasizing that offshore wind plays a strategic and valuable role in the global transition to low-carbon energy. The company states that its operational offshore wind projects are profitable and that it expects over a 10% return on equity from its renewables and low-carbon portfolio. While acknowledging economic pressures in the offshore wind sector - such as inflation and supply chain issues - Equinor highlights its counter-cyclical investment strategy and its belief in long-term value creation. The company also addresses environmental concerns by noting ongoing efforts to reduce negative impacts, including initiatives to develop fully circular recycling systems for wind turbine blades. Equinor argues that renewable energy development is essential for reducing global emissions, and that challenges, such as environmental trade-offs and community impacts, are being addressed through sustainable design and continuous improvement. It concludes that exiting wind energy would undermine its climate strategy and competitiveness in renewable markets.

PIRC Recommendation:While environmental and operational risks do exist in all energy sectors, the proponent's arguments rely heavily on generalizations and unsubstantiated claims, and do not reflect the broader consensus on wind energy's role in decarbonization. Wind power remains a vital and scalable renewable solution, particularly offshore, where Equinor holds established expertise and competitive advantage. The company's approach, including targeted investments, recycling initiatives, and a sustainability-focused environmental policy, reflects a commitment to improving the sector's performance and mitigating its downsides. Abruptly abandoning wind energy would undermine shareholder value, contradict global climate imperatives, and ignore existing profitability in Equinor's wind portfolio.

10. Shareholder Resolution: Withdraw From All Offshore Wind Projects and that All Bonus Schemes and Salary Increases Should Be Omitted in 2025 for the Equinor Board Members and Corporate Executive Committee

Proponent: Tom Jacob Dybwad

Proponent's argument: The proposal consists of two parts: (1) that Equinor withdraw from all offshore wind projects globally, and (2) that no bonus schemes or salary increases be granted in 2025 to the Board of Directors or the corporate executive committee. The proponent bases the first point on reported financial risks and potential losses tied to Equinor's offshore wind investments, particularly referencing media coverage regarding the Empire Wind 1 project in the U.S., which suggested the company faces billion-kroner write-downs. The second part of the resolution links these financial risks to management accountability, asserting that remuneration adjustments should be suspended due to these alleged misjudgments. Additionally, the proponent raises environmental concerns about offshore wind, citing negative effects on bird life and marine ecosystems from turbine erosion, including microplastics and toxic substances like PFAS and Bisphenol A, which may accumulate in marine food chains.

Company's response: Equinor advises shareholders to vote against the proposal, defending both its offshore wind strategy and remuneration framework. The company acknowledges that profitability in new offshore wind projects is currently under pressure due to inflation and supply chain issues but maintains confidence in the long-term potential of offshore wind, particularly in densely populated areas needing large-scale renewable energy. Equinor emphasizes that it is leveraging its offshore project experience to pursue value-adding renewables growth and expects over a 10% return on equity from its low-carbon portfolio. Regarding compensation, the company clarifies that Board members do not receive bonuses and that executive remuneration decisions are governed by the Executive Remuneration Policy approved in 2023. It further notes that remuneration decisions fall outside the annual general meeting's mandate under Norwegian law, being the responsibility of the Board (for the CEO and executive team) and the corporate assembly (for directors' fees). Thus, both elements of the proposal are viewed as either unjustified or procedurally inappropriate.

PIRC Recommendation: The call for a complete withdrawal from offshore wind projects is overly broad and risks undermining Equinor's strategic position in the transition to low-carbon energy. Offshore wind remains a critical technology for large-scale decarbonization, and the company has existing assets and experience that should not be discarded hastily. On executive compensation, the proposal's demand to cancel bonuses and salary increases reflects a reasonable shareholder frustration with how financial accountability is handled. Greater transparency and clearer links between project outcomes and pay structures would be beneficial. However, this should be discussed through extensive engagement with shareholders concerns. Overall, opposition is recommended.

11. Shareholder Resolution: Review Work Locations and Work Operations to Ensure That Any Potentially Hazardous Conditions Are Identified

Proponent: Idar Herland

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls for Equinor to strengthen its occupational health and safety management by implementing specific measures aimed at identifying and mitigating hazardous workplace conditions. The four key actions include: (1) thorough review of work locations and operations to identify potential risks, (2) personal exposure tracking with access for workers and safety delegates, (3) provision of medical follow-up for exposed employees, and (4) evaluation of possible work-related illnesses by occupational health services, with appropriate reporting. The proponent argues that Equinor is currently falling short of regulatory and internal policy expectations, citing repeated nonconformities identified by the Norwegian Ocean Industry Authority and violations of specific sections of national labor law. These shortcomings, particularly in relation to contractor safety oversight, present reputational and legal risks to the company and may result in significant financial consequences. The proposal asserts that Equinor must take greater accountability not only for its direct employees but also for workers contracted through third parties who may not be equipped to evaluate the risks they face on site.

Company's response: Equinor advises voting against the proposal, stating that it already follows a systematic and collaborative process for managing health and safety risks, including risks associated with chemical exposure and psychosocial factors. The company references formal coordination between business units and occupational health services, preventive work, and ongoing dialogue through corporate and local working environment committees (AMUs). Equinor argues that health and safety issues are best addressed at the operational level and within existing governance frameworks, and that shareholder proposals are not the appropriate vehicle for driving these changes. It further asserts that its approach is consistent with applicable legislation and internal standards.

PIRC Recommendation: While Equinor outlines existing systems and collaborative practices, the proponent highlights specific and credible gaps in implementation - especially regarding consistent exposure tracking, medical follow-up, and transparency around work-related illnesses. These shortcomings, particularly when highlighted by regulatory authorities, warrant a more structured and enforceable response than the company's general assurances. The resolution does not impose an operational overhaul but rather promotes fundamental rights to information, medical care, and occupational health accountability - all of which are in line with best practice in health and safety governance. In a high-risk industry, proactive and auditable systems to monitor and respond to exposure risks are vital. The inclusion of contractor workers also reinforces the company's duty of care under its role as principal. Supporting this resolution would improve risk management, regulatory compliance, and stakeholder trust.

12. Shareholder Resolution: Plan for How the Company Will Reach the Paris Agreement Goals and Net-zero Emissions by 2050

Proponent: Bente Marie Bakke, Gro Nylander, Guttorm Grundt, and Even Bakke

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Equinor to (1) present a detailed plan outlining how it will achieve the goals of the Paris Agreement and reach net-zero emissions by 2050, and (2) terminate all overseas oil and gas projects as soon as possible. The proponents argue that Equinor's current plans fall short of the emissions reductions necessary to meet Norway's international commitments, referencing the government's expectations for state-owned companies to integrate climate risk, set science-based targets, and report transparently. Citing research by the Australasian Centre for Corporate Responsibility (ACCR), the proponents highlight that Equinor's overseas operations have yielded minimal returns over two decades - a USD 2 billion profit from USD 103 billion invested - while incurring substantial losses, especially in North America. Additionally, international oil and gas projects reportedly generate emissions five times greater than Norway's annual total and have faced strong opposition from local communities due to environmental concerns. The proponents also note that major institutional investors have divested from Equinor over its strategy and lack of alignment with Paris targets. They argue that a continued focus on overseas fossil fuel expansion damages Equinor's financial performance and Norway's climate credibility.

Company's response: Equinor recommends voting against the proposal, stating that its updated 2025 Energy Transition Plan already outlines its pathway to net-zero by 2050 and is consistent with the Paris Agreement. The company adopts a three-part approach: reducing operational emissions (Scope 1 and 2), supporting decarbonisation through investment in low-carbon and renewable energy, and stress-testing its portfolio against 1.5°C-aligned scenarios. Equinor emphasizes that the plan - subject to an advisory shareholder vote under Item 8 - addresses the request for detailed emissions and transition planning. Regarding the call to exit international oil and gas activities, Equinor argues that such decisions fall under the board's strategic remit. It notes significant recent restructuring of its global portfolio, including exits from over 20 countries since 2018, and points to improved asset quality, stronger cash flow, and lower emissions intensity. In 2024, international operations accounted for 33% of production and nearly USD 6 billion in operational cash flow. The board maintains that Equinor's strategy balances economic and environmental imperatives and should remain under board oversight.

PIRC Recommendation: While Equinor's Energy Transition Plan sets out general goals that reference the Paris Agreement, it lacks a detailed explanation of how current and planned overseas oil and gas operations align with a credible pathway to net-zero. The proponent rightly highlights that Equinor's investment behaviour - particularly in high-risk, low-return international projects - raises concerns about strategic alignment with climate science and responsible capital stewardship. The request for clearer planning and transparency is consistent with good governance and investor expectations for science-based transition strategies. However, the proposal's call to terminate all overseas oil and gas projects is highly directive and operational in nature. While there is growing investor support for halting new fossil fuel expansion, the demand to also phase out existing operations - regardless of their carbon efficiency, contractual obligations, or contribution to transition financing - is a more rigid approach that may limit strategic flexibility and undermine value in the short term. It is recommended to support efforts to curb new fossil development and to realign capital allocation with a 1.5°C trajectory. But in this case, the proposal goes beyond setting expectations or guiding principles and instead prescribes an immediate operational direction. Overall, abstention is recommended.

13. Shareholder Resolution: Separate the Renewable Energy Part of the Company and Invest at Least Nok 5 Billion Annually in the Repair and Renewal of Ukraine's Energy Infrastructure

Proponent: Even Bakke and Guttorm Grundt

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Equinor to (1) separate its renewable energy business into a standalone public limited company with a revised ownership structure, and (2) invest at least NOK 5 billion annually in the repair and renewal of Ukraine's energy infrastructure. The proponents argue that Equinor has failed to deliver on its commitments implied by its rebranding from Statoil to Equinor, especially regarding renewable energy development. They cite Equinor's recent decisions to roll back renewable investment targets, phase out its CAPEX commitment to low-carbon solutions, and reduce its net carbon intensity goals - actions they interpret as a retreat from the Paris Agreement. This, they argue, undermines the company's credibility and suggests an entrenched fossil fuel bias within its legacy structure and culture. The first part of the proposal posits that structural separation would allow the renewable segment to scale independently and fulfill its potential without being subordinated to fossil fuel priorities. The second part frames Equinor's high war-time profits from gas sales to Europe as ethically problematic given the destruction of Ukraine's energy infrastructure by Russia. The proponents note that Equinor earned NOK 1,270 billion in revenue in 2022–23 alone, and yet has made no direct capital investment in Ukraine's energy recovery. They argue this poses reputational risks and contradicts Norway's international commitments. The proposed NOK 5 billion annual investment is portrayed not only as an ethical responsibility but also a strategic contribution to European energy security and long-term stability.

Company's response: Equinor opposes the proposal on both points. Regarding the separation of its renewables business, the Board argues that its integrated approach allows for optimal use of in-house expertise from oil and gas operations and leverages Equinor's existing market presence and infrastructure. It states that spinning off renewables would diminish synergies, weaken competitiveness in certain markets, and not improve investment conditions, which are currently challenged by inflation, interest rate pressures, and supply chain constraints - particularly in offshore wind. On Ukraine, Equinor highlights its indirect contribution through Norway's national support via the Nansen Programme, to which Equinor contributes as the country's largest taxpayer. The company also emphasizes its role as a reliable supplier of natural gas to Europe, which it sees as crucial to maintaining regional political stability and support for Ukraine. Additionally, Equinor notes its ongoing dialogues with Ukrainian authorities and limited contributions, including knowledge sharing and donations. The Board asserts that while the company is evaluating how it can further support Ukraine's energy system, mandatory financial commitments such as those proposed are not appropriate and should not be dictated by shareholders.

PIRC Recommendation: The proponent is right to highlight that Equinor has scaled down ambitions related to CAPEX in low-carbon technologies and softened its climate goals - actions that conflict with expectations for a Paris-aligned transition. The suggestion that these developments reflect a deeper cultural or structural misalignment within the company deserves scrutiny. However, the case for spinning off the renewables business is not yet compelling. While it is clear that Equinor must prioritize and elevate its green business strategy, creating a separate listed entity may not be the most effective way to achieve this. The proposal lacks clarity on how structural separation would accelerate decarbonisation or improve capital flows, and there is a genuine risk of weakening internal synergies between renewables, low-carbon solutions, and existing infrastructure. The intention behind the proposal is laudable, empowering renewables to grow unencumbered, but the outcome could be that the fossil side becomes more entrenched and less accountable. It is considered best practice to support climate transformation at the group level, not fragmentation that may leave the most polluting parts of a company less exposed to internal pressure.

On the Ukraine investment, Equinor has generated exceptional wartime profits through gas exports, and a principled, voluntary contribution to rebuilding Ukraine's energy infrastructure aligns with the values of climate justice and energy solidarity. That said, the proposal lacks a concrete operational framework, making the fixed NOK 5 billion figure more symbolic than actionable. Overall, opposition is recommended.

14. Shareholder Resolution: Equinor Shall Renew Their Green Aims, Avoid Further International Investment in Oil and Gas and Donate Billions to Ukraine

Proponent: Gro Nylander

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Equinor to (1) renew its green transition commitments, including its earlier ambition to become a broad energy company investing in solar and wind, (2) cease further international investments in oil and gas, and (3) donate substantial sums to support the rebuilding of Ukraine's energy infrastructure. The proponent criticizes Equinor for abandoning its earlier climate targets and emphasizes that more than 99% of the company's energy production remains fossil-based. Referencing poor financial returns and public protests surrounding international fossil investments, the proposal characterizes these ventures as environmentally harmful, reputationally damaging, and economically irresponsible. The proposal also emphasizes the ethical dimension of Equinor's profits during the war in Ukraine, calling for a significant financial contribution to help the country rebuild its devastated energy system. It suggests that failure to act could cement perceptions of Equinor and Norway as war profiteers. The shareholder links financial losses, investor dissatisfaction (e.g., the Sarasin divestment), and management performance to the broader critique of strategic drift and environmental negligence.

Company's response: Equinor recommends a vote against the proposal, asserting that its updated 2025 Energy Transition Plan provides a clear, structured pathway to net-zero emissions by 2050. The company highlights progress since 2020, noting that gross capital expenditure in renewables and low-carbon solutions has increased from 4% to 27% of total investments, with current plans to reach 10–12 GW of installed renewable capacity by 2030. The board acknowledges market-driven adjustments to renewable investments but maintains that the company remains aligned with Paris Agreement goals through a comprehensive strategy that includes operational decarbonization, investments in carbon capture, and strategic portfolio management. Regarding international oil and gas investments, Equinor defends its rebalanced and "high-graded" portfolio, which has exited over 20 countries since 2018. The remaining portfolio is focused on fewer, more profitable regions like the UK, USA, and Brazil, with international operations accounting for one-third of production and NOK 60 billion in cash flow in 2024. On Ukraine, Equinor points to its indirect contributions via Norway's Nansen Programme, and to its role as a stable energy supplier to Europe. It notes ongoing engagement with Ukrainian stakeholders, support through knowledge-sharing and material donations, and states that fixed monetary obligations are not appropriate for a listed company's governance.

PIRC Recommendation: The call to renew green transition ambitions is especially well-justified: Equinor's rollback of earlier targets on renewable investment and carbon intensity has weakened its alignment with a Paris-consistent trajectory. These developments have drawn criticism not only from environmental stakeholders but also from institutional investors, and they raise legitimate questions about the company's long-term credibility and climate positioning. Reaffirming Equinor's role as a "broad energy company" with a robust renewables strategy is essential to restoring trust and aligning with investor expectations for a low-carbon transition. The proposal's recommendation to halt new international fossil fuel investments is also directionally appropriate. A pause on new international developments could help Equinor strengthen climate alignment while preserving financial discipline. However, the resolution's call to donate "billions" annually to Ukraine, while ethically compelling, lacks necessary operational and financial detail. There is no clear mechanism proposed for allocating, structuring, or governing such a contribution, which is a significant omission given its scale and the broader shareholder governance implications. Although it would be recommended to strongly support efforts to channel wartime profits toward ethical and just recovery, shareholder resolutions of this nature require more planning and specificity to be considered viable at scale. Overall, abstention is recommended.

15. Shareholder Resolution: Gradually Divest from all International Operations

Proponent: Ivar Sætre

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Equinor to begin a phased divestment from all international operations, first in renewables and then in petroleum production. The proponent argues that Equinor was originally established to manage Norway's petroleum resources in the national interest, and that its international expansion since the 1990s has deviated from that purpose. He notes that international operations - both in fossil fuels and renewables - have entailed significant risk and have generated underwhelming returns, particularly in the renewables segment which, according to the proponent, has never produced an annual profit. The proposal also raises concerns about governance: with 70% of Equinor owned by the Norwegian state, oversight is ultimately managed by political bodies that may lack both deep knowledge of the business and personal financial stake in its outcomes. In this context, the proposal suggests that a gradual retreat from international operations is a prudent step to reduce risk and refocus Equinor's mission on domestic value creation.

Company's response: The board recommends voting against the proposal, emphasizing that Equinor's international portfolio is a carefully curated and strategically aligned part of the company's broader value creation model. It notes that since 2018, Equinor has exited over 20 countries and now focuses on core markets such as the UK, USA, and Brazil. This high-grading strategy has improved portfolio resilience, increased cash flow, and reduced emissions intensity. In 2024 alone, international operations accounted for 33% of total production and generated nearly USD 6 billion (NOK 60 billion) in cash flow. Regarding renewables, the board defends its long-term commitment, highlighting a target of 10–12 GW of installed capacity by 2030 and a disciplined, value-driven approach to investment. It also reaffirms that strategic decisions about portfolio composition are the responsibility of the board and management, consistent with corporate governance principles.

PIRC Recommendation: While the proponent raises important historical and governance concerns about the risks of international operations and the nature of state ownership, the proposal itself is too blunt and strategically counterproductive. A blanket directive to divest from all international assets - including renewables - runs counter to the demands of a just and effective energy transition. Global decarbonisation requires active engagement by experienced energy companies in both fossil and renewable value chains, including outside their home markets. Moreover, Equinor's recent restructuring efforts - exiting high-risk regions and concentrating on select core markets - represent a credible risk mitigation strategy. Retreating from international renewables would undercut efforts to scale clean energy technologies in key markets and contradict investor expectations around long-term climate alignment. Overall, opposition is recommended.

16. Shareholder Resolution: Review its Guidelines and Procedures for Human Rights Due Diligence Assessments

Proponent: Greenpeace

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Equinor review and strengthen its human rights due diligence (HRDD) procedures to ensure compliance with the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises, and the Norwegian Transparency Act. Specifically, it urges Equinor to scrutinize business relationships that may contribute to serious human rights abuses or violations of international law, with particular attention to Equinor's partnership with Ithaca Energy, majority-owned by Delek Group. Delek Group is listed by the UN for operating in occupied Palestinian territories and has been excluded from both the Norwegian Government Pension Fund and KLP due to human rights concerns. The resolution argues that Equinor's indirect financial relationship with Delek through the Rosebank project (projected to deliver NOK 3.5 billion in revenues to Delek) raises legal and ethical questions - especially since Delek also supplies fuel to the Israeli military. Greenpeace contends that failing to assess this relationship under the Norwegian Transparency Act represents a significant governance and legal risk. With Norway's government advising against business activity that supports Israel's settlement infrastructure, the proponent urges Equinor to demonstrate responsible corporate conduct, including the option of exiting such partnerships if warranted.

Company's response: Equinor opposes the proposal, asserting that its current human rights policy and HRDD procedures - updated in November 2024 - are already aligned with international standards. These include the UNGPs and OECD Guidelines, which form the basis for both Equinor's internal policies and the Norwegian Transparency Act. The company emphasizes that in global energy projects, it does not always choose its partners, who are often assigned through licensing arrangements approved by governments. The board argues that extending due diligence expectations to the unrelated activities of partners and their parent companies - as the proposal suggests - would go beyond the scope of existing standards, reduce the company's ability to focus on its own risk management, and add bureaucracy without clear human rights benefit. Equinor maintains that it is already aligned with Norwegian government guidance and that the resolution's call for a "responsible exit" mechanism from indirect relationships is unjustified under current legal and regulatory frameworks.

PIRC Recommendation: While Equinor's existing HRDD framework references international best practices, the proposal highlights a significant and credible gap in the company's application of those standards to material business relationships. The case of Ithaca Energy and its ownership by Delek Group, a company named by the UN for contributing to illegal settlement activities in occupied territories, represents such a scenario. With other Norwegian institutional investors having divested from Delek on ethical grounds, and with Norwegian government policy advising against involvement in such business activity, Equinor's continued partnership warrants further review. The request is not for immediate disengagement, but for a thorough and transparent reassessment of how HRDD procedures are applied in these complex cases - including the possibility of responsible exit where serious breaches are identified. This approach is aligned with the expectations of the Norwegian Transparency Act and the ethical obligations of state-owned enterprises under the government's white paper on ownership policy. It also reflects evolving stakeholder expectations regarding responsible corporate conduct in high-risk geopolitical contexts. Equinor's claim that applying such due diligence would result in "added bureaucracy" does not outweigh the reputational and compliance risks posed by association with actors involved in internationally condemned activities. A review of due diligence procedures - not a prescriptive outcome - is a modest but necessary governance step.

17. Shareholder Resolution: Identify and Manage Risks and Possibilities Regarding Climate and Integrate These in the Company's Strategy

Proponent:WWF

Proponent's argument:The proposal urges Equinor to enhance its climate strategy by (1) setting science-based short- and long-term targets for absolute greenhouse gas emission reductions across its full value chain (Scope 1, 2, and 3), (2) aligning these targets with the 1.5°C temperature goal in the Paris Agreement, and (3) reporting transparently on progress. The proponent criticizes Equinor's recently updated Energy Transition Plan for relying primarily on carbon intensity metrics rather than absolute emissions reductions, which has allowed total Scope 3 emissions to rise even as intensity declined. The resolution argues that this approach undermines climate credibility, misaligns with investor expectations, and fails to meet the Norwegian state's clarified sustainability expectations for companies in which it holds majority ownership. The proposal cites the Norwegian government's white paper on state ownership, which calls for companies like Equinor to balance environmental, social, and financial performance in a way that does not compromise the well-being of future generations. Additionally, it references the recent divestment of Sarasin & Partners as a signal of investor dissatisfaction with Equinor's current transition plan, especially given its increased projections for oil and gas production and reduced ambition in renewables. The proposal calls for alignment with the Science Based Targets Initiative (SBTi) to ensure credibility and accountability.

Company's response: Equinor recommends voting against the proposal, defending its updated Energy Transition Plan as consistent with the Paris Agreement. The company highlights its multi-faceted strategy, which includes operational emissions reductions (Scope 1 and 2), decarbonisation investments, and stress-testing its portfolio against 1.5°C-aligned scenarios. Equinor acknowledges the challenge of Scope 3 emissions - which are largely beyond its direct control - and argues that using an intensity-based metric for these emissions allows for more nuanced and system-wide decarbonisation, while maintaining energy security. The board cautions that setting absolute Scope 3 reduction targets could result in unintended negative consequences, such as early closure of efficient installations or shifting emissions to less transparent producers. It argues that Equinor's strategy enables meaningful contributions to decarbonisation through collaboration, CCS deployment, and responsible operations. The company considers its current reporting and shareholder engagement mechanisms sufficient to meet transparency and accountability expectations.

PIRC Recommendation:While Equinor's updated Energy Transition Plan shows some progress, its reliance on carbon intensity metrics, particularly for Scope 3 emissions, falls short of the transparency and ambition required to align with a 1.5°C pathway. As the proponent rightly notes, intensity metrics allow emissions to grow in absolute terms - as seen in Equinor's own reporting - while conveying the appearance of progress. This weakens the company's credibility, limits investor insight, and risks reputational harm, particularly in light of Norway's enhanced sustainability expectations for state-owned enterprises. Equinor's argument that absolute Scope 3 targets could create "adverse incentives" reflects a short-term operational mindset that underestimates growing systemic and market pressures for decarbonisation. Peer companies and financial institutions are increasingly shifting toward absolute targets, in line with the Science Based Targets Initiative, to better reflect the urgency and scale of transformation required. Investors have made clear that alignment with Paris goals requires not just emissions intensity reductions, but meaningful cuts in absolute emissions. The proposal is moderate in scope: it does not prescribe specific operational changes, but requests a strategy realignment that reflects credible climate leadership. It also encourages consistent, science-based reporting and planning - core tenets of good governance.

18. Shareholder Resolution: Assess if the Company's Planned Increase in Oil and Gas Production is Consistent With the Majority Shareholder ExpectationsProponent: ACCR, Sampension, and Folksam

Proponent's argument: The resolution requests that Equinor's board formally assess and disclose whether the company's planned oil and gas production increase - as outlined in its 2025 Energy Transition Plan - is consistent with the expectations of its majority shareholder, the Norwegian state. Specifically, the proposal seeks (1) an evaluation of consistency with Norway's stated climate expectations under the Paris Agreement, (2) a similar assessment of the international upstream growth strategy, and (3) the carbon budget assumptions used to justify these strategies. The shareholders argue that Equinor's oil and gas expansion appears to contradict the state's expectation - reiterated in multiple public forums - that Equinor "sets targets and implements measures to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in both the short and long term in line with the Paris Agreement." The proposal also raises financial governance concerns, highlighting the poor returns from Equinor's international upstream operations: an average 3% return over two decades versus 68% on the Norwegian shelf. Finally, it underscores the carbon budget constraints associated with a 1.5°C scenario, pointing out that sanctioned fossil projects already exceed the remaining carbon space.

Company's response: Equinor recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that its Energy Transition Plan already includes comprehensive disclosures on climate risk, carbon frameworks, and strategic alignment with the Paris Agreement. The board highlights its three-pronged strategy: (1) optimizing oil and gas while lowering emissions, (2) growing renewable capacity, and (3) investing in low-carbon solutions. It emphasizes that oil and gas will continue to play a role in global energy needs during the transition period and that Equinor is positioned to meet this demand responsibly through a "high-graded," resilient international portfolio. The company further argues that absolute Scope 3 targets are impractical due to the end-use nature of emissions. Instead, it uses intensity-based targets to guide decisions and reduce carbon impact without prematurely shuttering efficient operations or outsourcing emissions to less responsible producers. The board maintains that additional assessments as requested by the resolution would not materially improve transparency or oversight beyond what is already provided.

PIRC Recommendation: While Equinor's current disclosures are extensive, the resolution addresses a key governance and alignment issue: whether the company's strategic expansion in oil and gas, particularly internationally, is in conflict with the expectations of its majority shareholder - the Norwegian state - and the state's own climate policy commitments. Given Norway's formal ownership policy - which calls for sustainable, long-term returns aligned with environmental integrity - a structured assessment of how Equinor's fossil fuel expansion aligns (or fails to align) with this mandate is both reasonable and necessary. The proposal does not call for operational changes but for clarity, accountability, and internal consistency, particularly when minority shareholders rely on state policy signals to assess long-term risk. Furthermore, the argument that intensity metrics are more appropriate than absolute reductions sidesteps the central issue: Equinor's absolute Scope 3 emissions are growing, not shrinking. Without a transparent assessment of carbon budget assumptions and strategic consistency with 1.5°C, the company risks both regulatory and reputational challenges. This resolution supports informed shareholder oversight, encourages alignment with sovereign climate obligations, and reinforces principles of good governance and risk disclosure.

For the Annual Performance Related Profit Share, 50% of any award payable above an amount equal to base salary is deferred into shares for three years. It would be best practise for at least half of this award to defer into shares for a period of at least three years regardless of the payout. The performance period for the PSP is three-years, which is deemed overly short-term, however an additional two-year holding period applies post-vesting, which is welcomed. A. Shareholder Proposal: Setting Discount Rate for Employee Share Issuance

Proponent: FCPE Crédit Agricole S.A. Actions

Proponent's argument: The proponent seeks to establish annual guidelines for determining discount rates applied to capital increases reserved for Crédit Agricole Group employees. The aim is to define a typical profile of employee investors and encourage broader participation by ensuring that share acquisition does not compromise employees' financial stability. The resolution does not seek to constrain the Board's authority but rather to institutionalise a framework that allows annual reviews of appropriate discount levels-suggesting rates of up to 30% for a five-year lock-up and 40% for ten years. It argues that this would align with market conditions, employee expectations, and employer branding, reinforcing the Group's human capital strategy by enhancing loyalty and engagement through accessible employee shareholding.

Company's response: The Board of Directors opposes the resolution. It emphasises that the current process already allows for annual employee share offerings, which are timed to coincide with incentive and profit-sharing disbursements. The Board asserts it retains full authority to set discount rates, with recommendations from the Compensation Committee based on a broad analysis of investment levels, participation rates, and financial conditions. No transaction has been proposed with a discount below 20%. Moreover, the Board argues that each capital increase is considered in its specific context, balancing employee participation with shareholder interests, and guided by the Group's financial performance. It highlights that existing authorisations (31st and 32nd resolutions) provide sufficient flexibility, thus rejecting the proposed change as unnecessary.

PIRC Analysis: The Board already implements employee offerings annually and applies discount rates based on comprehensive assessments. The additional guidelines risk constraining decision-making or leading to expectations of fixed discounts, potentially misaligning with the Group's financial strategy or broader shareholder interests. Therefore, opposition is recommended.

3.. Appoint the Auditors

EY proposed. Non-audit fees represented 2.33% of audit fees during the year under review and 3.24% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than ten years. There are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Clawback Policy

Proponent Shareholder: Mr. John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The shareholder, Mr. John Chevedden, calls for amendments to O'Reilly Automotive's existing clawback policy to expand its applicability. Specifically, the proposal requests that the policy apply to all Named Executive Officers (NEOs) and that not just misconduct but also conduct or negligence should trigger mandatory recoupment. It also asks for annual disclosure on deliberations about policy enforcement, including reasons for non-application. The proponent argues the current policy lacks transparency and is insufficiently robust, posing risks of executives being financially rewarded even when negligent. The example of Wells Fargo is cited to show how narrow interpretations of executive responsibility can undermine accountability, as millions in unearned pay were not recovered despite clear reputational harm. The proposal suggests that stronger clawback mechanisms would reinforce ethical standards and align executive incentives with shareholder interests.

Company's response: The Board opposes the proposal, asserting that the current policy is comprehensive, effective, and compliant with both SEC regulations and Nasdaq listing standards. The Company's amended Clawback Policy, in effect since 2023, includes a mandatory "no fault" recovery provision for erroneously awarded incentive compensation following an accounting restatement regardless of executive culpability. Additionally, the policy allows for discretionary recovery if misconduct is identified. The Company believes the proposed changes would add unnecessary complexity and administrative burden, particularly as existing rules already mandate extensive disclosure about clawback activities. The Board also highlights its broader framework of ethics policies, including a Code of Conduct and required training programs, to maintain accountability and mitigate misconduct. It concludes that the proposal offers minimal incremental benefit while imposing disproportionate cost and distraction from strategic priorities.

PIRC analysis: While O'Reilly Automotive has adopted a clawback policy that meets regulatory requirements, the shareholder proposal seeks to broaden its scope by including cases of executive negligence and requiring enhanced transparency around the policy's application. These additions go beyond the standard "no-fault" triggers, aiming to strengthen accountability and prevent executives from retaining incentive pay when their actions-or inactions-cause harm to shareholders. Given the absence of any obligation under current rules to address negligence explicitly, and considering that broader clawback provisions have been widely recognised as best practice in corporate governance, this proposal represents a meaningful improvement. On this basis, support for the proposal is recommended.

Non-Executive Director and Chair of the Nominating and Governance Committee. Not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. Commerzbank proposes to extend the ability to hold virtual-only general meetings until May 31, 2027.

It is proposed to amend the articles in order to allow virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. 4.. Shareholder Resolution: Political Donations

Proponent: John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request Otis to prepare and semiannually update a report, which shall be presented to the pertinent board of directors committee and posted on the Company's website. Shareholders argue the following: "This proposal asks Otis to disclose all of its electoral spending, including payments to 527 groups and payments to 501 social welfare organizations, which may be used for electoral purposes-and are otherwise undisclosed. This would bring our Company in line with a growing number of leading companies, including Western Digital Corp., Fortive Corp., and Illinois Tool Works Inc., which present this information on their websites. Without knowing the recipients of our company's political dollars Otis Directors and Otis shareholders cannot sufficiently assess whether our company's election-related spending aligns or conflicts with its policies on climate change and sustainability, or other areas of growing concern. Improved Otis political spending disclosure will protect the reputation of Otis and preserve shareholder value."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Otis complies with all applicable laws when engaging in any type of political activity, including laws requiring public disclosure of political contributions and lobbying expenses. As a result, significant information about our political contributions is already publicly available. To the extent Otis makes contributions through the Otis PAC, we are subject to federal public disclosure requirements. Federal election law requires federal campaign committees and federal political committees to file public reports disclosing their contributions and expenditures. Federal Election Commission reports on political contributions by the Otis PAC are available at www.fec.gov and also can be found at www.opensecrets.org. State and local candidates for elective office and state and local political committees are generally required to file similar public reports disclosing contributions and expenditures. Reports on quarterly receipts and disbursements by the Otis PAC also are readily available on the Federal Election Commission's website. In addition, we participate in certain trade associations appropriate for our business to keep abreast of developments within our industry. Otis' membership in a particular trade association does not indicate agreement with all of the association's political positions or views. Therefore, disclosure of association dues would not provide our shareholders with any greater understanding of our business strategies, initiatives or values."

PIRC analysis: The transparency and completeness of the company's reporting on political spending could be improved. The board's argument makes clear that its compliance with political spending disclosure regulations complies only with the minimum requirements: this is considered incomplete and insufficient. Moreover, it is to the benefit of the company and its shareholders to be open about political spending and so avoid any suspicion and any damage that may cause to the company's reputation, that the company may be using shareholders' funds in an inappropriate way to gain undue influence. The request for a report is considered reasonable and a vote for the resolution is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Written Consent

Proponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the board of directors take the steps necessary to enable 10% of shares to request a record date to initiate written consent. Shareholders argue the following: "Currently it takes the formal backing 35% of all the shares that normally cast ballots at the annual meeting to do so little ask for a record date for written consent. Plus any action taken by written consent would still need more than 70% supermajority approval from the shares that normally cast ballots at the annual meeting. This 70% requirement gives almost overwhelming supermajority protection to CVS management that will remain unchanged. Enabling 10% of shares to apply for a record date for written consent makes sense because scores of companies do not even require 01% of stock ownership to do so little as request a record date."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "In 2012, the Board presented for stockholder approval an amendment to the Company's governing documents that strengthened the ability of stockholders to act by written consent. Through this amendment, which was approved by 95% of stockholders who voted (reflecting 76% of all shares outstanding), CVS Health stockholders with 25% of the voting power of our outstanding capital stock (not "35% of all shares that normally cast ballots at the annual meeting", as the John Chevedden Proposal incorrectly states) can take any action permitted to be taken at an annual or special meeting through a written consent of the stockholders, which would allow our stockholders to act by written consent with less than unanimous approval. The Board considers the current threshold for action by written consent, which is higher than sought in the John Chevedden Proposal, to be the appropriate threshold. The 25% threshold ensures that the matter is of interest to more than a handful of our stockholders. At a 10% threshold, as proposed in the John Chevedden Proposal, as few as two of our larger stockholders would be able to decide whether a matter should be considered by written consent, which would be a significantly lower threshold than that required to call a special meeting (15%). The Board strongly believes that it should be more challenging, not easier, to act by written consent than by calling a special meeting."

PIRC analysis: There are emergency situations where convening a special meeting might take too long or be too difficult, and written consents may be gathered more quickly. Since the company has weak or no special meeting rights, written consent rights are very important. A vote for the resolution is recommended.

After allotment, shares will be restricted for three years, which is not considered to be sufficiently long term. The Company states that exercise of shares will be based on targets, which at this time remain undisclosed.

Plans to increase employee shareholding are considered to be a positive governance practice, as they can contribute to alignment between employees and shareholders. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Energy Supply Ratio

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by the Comptroller of the City of New York

Proponent's argument: The proponents, representing New York City's public pension funds, urge Morgan Stanley to disclose an annual "Energy Supply Ratio" (ESR), a metric comparing its financing of low-carbon energy to fossil fuel energy. This ratio, already being published by peers such as Citi and JPMorgan, would complement Morgan Stanley's current emissions disclosures by showing how its actual capital flows align with its stated net-zero goals and energy transition commitments. Proponents argue that such disclosure is increasingly seen as a leading practice among financial institutions and is critical for investor decision-making. The proposal notes Morgan Stanley's $750 billion low-carbon finance target, but questions whether the firm's fossil fuel activities may undermine its climate positioning. The ESR would provide transparency, comparability, and accountability to shareholders as the firm manages transition risk and competes for leadership in sustainable finance.

Company's response: The Board opposes the proposal, asserting that the ESR is a nascent, non-standardised metric that does not accurately reflect the firm's climate strategy or progress. Morgan Stanley argues it already provides robust disclosures under established frameworks like PCAF and TCFD and reports its financed emissions and progress toward a $1 trillion sustainable finance goal. The firm believes the ESR lacks clear emissions linkage, could be distorted by market-driven fluctuations, and may lead to investor confusion given differing methodologies across banks and data providers. It warns that publishing a proprietary ESR might set unrealistic expectations for performance against a non-integrated metric and risk distracting from its science-aligned targets. The company concludes that ESR reporting would not offer material value to shareholders and would divert resources from more relevant, strategic disclosures.

PIRC analysis: The proponent is seeking an acceptable level of additional disclosure on the Company's plans for carbon neutrality, with the purpose of achieving a 1.5 degrees Celsius warming scenario targets, which should be incorporated throughout the whole business model of the company. In this sense, reporting on the financing portfolio of the company and its exposure to low-carbon energy solutions as opposed to fossil-fuel ones provides a transparent assessment of the company's commitment to carbon neutrality. Shareholders have an interest in carbon neutrality, emission reduction and overall energy transition impacts lending and underwriting practices, as a means of informing them of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, of strategies put in place to manage those risks and opportunities, and of the evaluation of the potential impact of different scenarios, including a 1.5 degrees Celsius scenario, on their businesses, strategy, and financial planning. The company has not clearly pledged to refrain from financing all new plans based on fossil fuels. Fossil fuels financing is risky, with records of several human rights and environmental violations and returns that can pay out only years after the initial expensive investment. On the contrary, financing the energy transition could be indeed an opportunity especially for banks, as the size of a greener economy is directly related to the availability of financing for those projects.

4.. Amend the Company's Restated Certificate of Incorporation to provide for the Exculpation of Officers

The Company proposes amending its Restated Certificate of Incorporation to allow for the exculpation of corporate officers from certain personal liabilities, as now permitted under a 2022 amendment to the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonise corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are a more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

26. Shareholder Resolution: Disclosure on Company's Approach to Pay and the Real Living Wage

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by ShareAction

Proponent's argument: A shareholder coalition led by ShareAction has proposed a resolution seeking greater transparency from NEXT regarding its approach to setting base pay and compliance with the real Living Wage. The resolution calls on the Company to publish a detailed report covering several key metrics: the methodology used to set hourly base pay for direct employees and third-party contractors; oversight responsibilities of the board; the number of employees paid below the real Living Wage, broken down by contract and hours; turnover rates among hourly workers; and a cost/benefit analysis of adopting the real Living Wage. The proposal argues that this information is crucial for investors to understand how the company manages its human capital, ensures equitable treatment of workers, and mitigates risks associated with underpaying employees. ShareAction emphasises that NEXT's current practices may not meet its own stated values of fairness and support for its workforce, especially since it pays many workers at or near statutory minimums and does not guarantee the National Living Wage until after one year of service. The lack of data transparency around contracted third-party workers is also highlighted. The proposal cites studies showing that better pay correlates with lower turnover and greater productivity. By aligning pay with the real cost of living, the resolution argues, NEXT could reinforce long-term sustainability and contribute positively to broader economic stability and achievement of SDG 8.

Company's response: NEXT's board strongly recommends voting against this resolution, asserting that the company already provides comprehensive disclosures on workforce matters aligned with legal requirements. It argues that producing an additional bespoke report would be an inappropriate and inefficient use of resources. The board emphasises its commitment to balancing the needs of all stakeholders-investors, consumers, and employees-when determining wage policies. NEXT outlines two major objections to formal Living Wage accreditation: first, that it would delegate important pay decisions to an external body, reducing the Company's flexibility to adapt pay in line with performance and business context; second, that mandated pay increases would impose substantial cost burdens, potentially leading to higher prices and fewer job opportunities. The company stresses that its annual wage bill already exceeds £900 million and any further obligations could hinder operational flexibility. While acknowledging challenges in retail sector pay, NEXT contends that its jobs remain highly sought after and offer additional benefits, such as a 25% staff discount. The board concludes that the proposed resolution is not in shareholders' best interests, as it threatens to undermine its capacity to independently manage wages in a cost-effective and context-sensitive manner.

PIRC Recommendation: This proposal seeks critical disclosures around base pay practices and alignment with the real Living Wage, a benchmark increasingly recognised as essential for sustainable employment practices and corporate accountability. Transparency on human capital policies is material for investor assessment, particularly in a sector marked by low pay and high turnover. The requested reporting would improve oversight, align with stakeholder interests, and support long-term value creation. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent: John chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to remove the current provision that considers the voice of certain Amphenol (APH) shareholders as non-shareholders. Currently all shares not held for one continuous year are considered non-shareholders if they seek to call for a special shareholder meeting on an important matter. Shareholders argue the following: "The current one-year exclusion for all shares held for less than one continuous year makes the current so-called shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting useless. There is no point to have useless right on the books of APH. The reason to enable all shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting is to allow one shareholder or a group of shareholders to quickly acquire APH shares to equal the challenging 25% share ownership requirement of all shares outstanding to call for a special shareholder meeting when there is an urgent matter to consider in order to incentivize a turnaround of APH."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Eliminating the continuous one-year holding period requirement would enable investors to purchase capital stock and immediately seek to call a special stockholder meeting to try and advance agendas that are not necessarily in the long-term interests of the Company and its stockholders, and which would be more appropriately pursued through our other mechanisms for engagement. The Board continues to believe that the one-year holding period requirement included in the Company's special meeting right affords stockholders a full and meaningful opportunity to call a special meeting while balancing the concern that investors with short-term interests may abuse the right to call a special stockholder meeting and reduces the burdens placed on the Board, management and employees resulting from unnecessary or duplicative meetings for less significant matters."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The company adopted a 25% threshold. It is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

13. Shareholder Resolution: Scope 3 Greenhouse Gas Emissions Reporting

Proponent: Green Century Capital Management, Inc. (on behalf of Green Century Equity Fund)

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Chubb disclose the greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions associated with its underwriting, insuring, and investment activities (i.e., Scope 3 emissions). The proponent cites the worsening climate-driven insurance crisis in the United States - with insured losses surpassing $100 billion for four consecutive years and coverage becoming increasingly unaffordable or unavailable - as a material financial risk for insurers. Despite these developments, Chubb continues to underwrite and invest in high-emitting industries, reportedly insuring $550-$850 million in fossil fuel projects and holding $898 million in fossil fuel investments. The proponent notes that Chubb does not currently report emissions linked to these activities, leaving shareholders without a clear understanding of the company's climate risk exposure. The proposal highlights that peers such as Travelers, AIG, and The Hartford have begun disclosing financed emissions, demonstrating that industry-standard methodologies - including those from the Partnership for Carbon Accounting Financials (PCAF) - are available and in use. The resolution argues that disclosure of these emissions is essential for assessing climate-related financial risks and Chubb's role in accelerating or mitigating climate change.

Company's response: Chubb recommends voting against the proposal, citing the maturity of its existing climate strategy and disclosures. The company argues that its current approach - built around underwriting criteria for high-emitting industries, risk engineering services (Chubb Resilience Services), and product offerings supporting the low-carbon transition - provides more actionable and impactful data than Scope 3 emissions estimates. Chubb asserts that disclosing Scope 3 emissions would be "duplicative," "misleading," and "resource-wasting," due to methodological shortcomings, lack of reliable client emissions data, and flawed attribution mechanisms. The company challenges the relevance of Scope 3 emissions for assessing Chubb's own climate risk or resilience and cites strong shareholder opposition to similar proposals in 2023 and 2024. Chubb also references its compliance with emerging regulatory frameworks, such as Swiss law and the ISSB S-2 standard, stating that Scope 3 emissions are not financially material and therefore not required. In Chubb's view, the proposed disclosure would not support the transition to a low-carbon economy and could introduce regulatory and legal risks without yielding decision-useful information.

PIRC analysis: Scope 3 emissions (all indirect emissions that occur in the value chain of the reporting company, including both upstream and downstream emissions) can be indicators of exposure to climate risks, such as carbon and energy 'hot spots' in the supply chain or use of products. Although their reporting is not compulsory under the GHG Protocol, they can help companies identify opportunities to create greater efficiencies in their value chains. Quantifying and reporting these emissions is only the first step into building a strategy with targets to reduce Scope 3 emissions. This will allow the company manage risks and opportunities related to the value chain emissions more proactively, including engagement with its value chain on other sustainability issues deriving from this climate-related approach. Support is recommended.

QUEST DIAGNOSTICS INCORPORATED AGM - 15-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Support Special Shareholder Meeting Improvement

Proponent: John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to remove the current provision that considers the voice of certain Quest Diagnostics shareholders as non-shareholders. Currently all shares not held for one continuous year are considered non-shareholders if they seek to call for a special shareholder meeting on an important matter. Shareholders argue the following: "the current one-year exclusion for all shares held for less than one continuous year makes the current so-called shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting useless. There is no point to have useless right on the books of DGX. The reason to enable all shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting is to allow one shareholder or a group of shareholders to quickly acquire DGX shares to equal the challenging 15% share ownership requirement of all shares outstanding to call for a special shareholder meeting when there is an urgent matter to consider in order to incentivize a turnaround of DGX. The best strategies for turning around a company do not necessarily come from a company's existing shareholders."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Company's historical and current corporate governance practices reflect our continuing commitment to robust, balanced corporate governance best practices. We maintain a strong record of responsiveness and accountability to stockholder concerns through implementation of strong stockholder rights and extensive stockholder engagement. The Board believes that providing stockholders with the right to cause the Company to call a special meeting is an important corporate governance practice that enhances stockholder rights. The Board believes that the Company's current 15% threshold to call a special meeting, subject to a one-year continuous holding period and other customary procedural requirements, is aligned with strong governance practices and strikes the appropriate balance between allowing stockholders to communicate their views and vote on important matters that arise between annual meetings and protecting against the risk that one or a small group of stockholders with narrow interests may potentially misuse the special meeting right. [...] The Board is responsive to stockholder feedback, as exhibited by the amendments to our Restated Certificate of Incorporation in 2022 lowering the share ownership threshold for shareholders to request that the Company call a special meeting to 15% from 20%, and the adoption of the right of stockholders to act by written consent that is not unanimous. These amendments were recommended by the Board and voted on and approved by our stockholders at the 2022 Annual Meeting after careful consideration and engagement with stockholders. In discussions with and outreach to stockholders, the one-year continuous holding requirement to call a special meeting has not been identified as a concern."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 15% threshold adopted by the company, which is welcomed. However it is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Use of Medically Important Antimicrobials in Food-Producing Animals

Proponent: The Shareholder Commons (TSC), on behalf of H.E.S.T. Australia Ltd. (CAN 006 818 695) as trustee for HESTA.

Proponent's argument: The proposal, filed by The Shareholder Commons on behalf of HESTA, urges Yum! Brands to adopt a company-wide policy to comply with World Health Organization (WHO) Guidelines on the use of medically important antimicrobials in food-producing animals. It highlights the company's influential role as the world's largest restaurant business and its current selective efforts on antibiotic use reduction in poultry and beef as insufficient: "Some of Yum's brands have made some progress... While this is laudable, it falls short of the measures necessary to protect Yum's investors' diversified portfolios." The core concern is the systemic threat posed by AMR to both public health and economic stability. AMR, driven by overuse of antibiotics in agriculture, is identified by the WHO as "one of the top 10 global public health threats facing humanity." Citing multiple authoritative sources, including the WHO, the UN, and financial journalism, the proponents argue that AMR could reduce global output by $100 trillion by 2050, harming all long-term investment portfolios: "Yum's profit gain that comes at the expense of public health is a bad trade for Yum's diversified shareholders, who rely on broad economic growth to achieve their financial objectives." The proposal emphasizes that Yum's continued engagement with suppliers not aligned to WHO guidelines undermines long-term shareholder value. It calls for Yum to stop using antibiotics for growth promotion and disease prevention in healthy animals across all species and markets.

Company's response: Yum's Board recommends voting against the proposal, arguing it would undermine the Company's "well-developed strategy for controlling the use of antibiotics". The Board asserts that a blanket adoption of the WHO Guidelines is not industry standard and lacks consensus among experts: "Such a policy has not been widely accepted by industry peers or experts in the field, making it particularly ill-advised." Yum emphasizes its multi-layered antimicrobial stewardship strategy, updated in 2024, which now covers over 90% of its animal protein purchases. This includes expanded guidance for pork, poultry, and beef across its brands (KFC, Pizza Hut, Taco Bell). The policy supports "judicious use" of antibiotics only when necessary for animal health and includes: Third-party verified auditing (e.g., USDA PVP for poultry) Collaboration with ICASA to study antibiotic use in beef Engagement in USAID-led stewardship principles in poultry The company argues AMR is a "multifaceted problem" best addressed by governments, and that overemphasizing agricultural sources overlooks more significant contributors like human medicine. According to a 2024 updated expert report commissioned by Yum: "Responsible antibiotic prescription in humans may be the highest impact strategy for reducing AMR's effect moving forward." Yum concludes that its existing strategy is credible, science-based, and delivering measurable progress, and that the proposed change would "redirect valuable focus and resources".

PIRC analysis: While Yum's current AMR strategy shows notable evolution and commitment, the company falls short of full alignment with global health guidelines, especially the WHO's recommendations for ending prophylactic use of antibiotics in healthy animals. The WHO Guidelines are internationally recognized and foundational for curbing AMR at its source - a risk with cross-sectoral economic implications. Yum acknowledges AMR as a public health crisis and highlights collaborative initiatives. However, its piecemeal policy and heavy emphasis on internal flexibility over external standards may allow ongoing overuse in parts of its supply chain. The proponent rightly frames AMR as a systemic risk threatening portfolio-wide returns and public welfare - concerns that go beyond individual company performance. A company with Yum's scale has a responsibility to lead, not lag, in aligning with science-based global standards. Adopting the WHO Guidelines across all markets would provide a clear and consistent framework, reduce systemic risk, and uphold the interests of diversified shareholders.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Faith-Based Employee Resource Groups

Proponent: Bowyer Research, Inc. on behalf of the Oklahoma Tobacco Settlement Endowment Trust (TSET).

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request the Board of Directors of Yum! Brands, Inc. conduct an evaluation and issue a report within the next year, at reasonable cost and excluding proprietary information and disclosure of anything that would constitute an admission of pending litigation, evaluating the risks related to religious discrimination against employees. The proponent argues that recognizing religious identity within Yum's diversity framework would help attract top talent, foster inclusivity, and build trust. Citing the 2024 Viewpoint Diversity Score Business Index, the proposal notes that over 64% of peer companies lack faith-based ERGs, and only 5% host faith-specific groups. Yum! Brands is identified among those without such representation, despite hosting ERGs focused on race, gender identity, and military status. The proposal further emphasizes employee concerns from the 2023 Freedom at Work survey: "60% of employees were concerned that their company would punish them for expressing their religious or political views... even on their private social media accounts." Additionally, the proponent invokes recent Supreme Court rulings (Groff v. DeJoy; Muldrow v. City of St. Louis) to underscore that religious protections now cover all employment privileges, implying that not permitting faith-based ERGs may be legally questionable. The requested outcome is a report within one year assessing the risks of religious discrimination and evaluating how existing structures may fall short in addressing such risks.

Company's response: Yum's Board recommends a vote against the proposal, stating that the company already provides robust policies and safeguards against religious discrimination and that a report is unnecessary. "The Company is deeply committed to creating a culture of inclusion and belonging that allows employees to express their religious faith and beliefs freely, without fear of bias, harassment or unequal treatment." Yum! details its current measures: An Anti-Discrimination and Harassment Policy applicable across the employment lifecycle A confidential Speak Up helpline for anonymous reports A global compliance program with mandatory training on protected characteristics and workplace behavior Religious accommodations, including flexible time off and floating holidays The company emphasizes its employee experience surveys, which reportedly show no significant demand for faith-based ERGs: "Religion has not been identified as a factor that impacts the quality of employee experience at the Company." The company frames its existing Communities of Belonging (COBs) - the equivalent of ERGs - as demand-driven. It asserts that the absence of a faith-based COB reflects employee priorities rather than a gap in inclusivity or risk exposure. Finally, Yum argues that its existing framework already meets or exceeds legal standards, including the recent case law referenced by the proponent.

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of staff diversity lie in widening the perspectives on human resources brought to bear on decision-making, avoiding too great a similarity of attitude and helping companies understand their workforces as a kaleidoscope of customers, marketplace, supply chain and society as a whole. Disclosure surrounding the company's staff composition allows shareholders to consider diversity in the context of the long-term interests of the company, including the ability to attract and retain key talent. Disclosure of a policy to improve diversity and goals that have been set to meet this policy also reassures shareholders that a diverse board is not just an aspiration but a goal. However, this resolution appears to be filed by a right-wing policy think tanks as a spoiler resolution to prevent other shareholders from filing resolutions regarding the company's diversity and focuses on ideological diversity with the clear intent to ensure that conservative views are represented on the board as well as so-called liberal perspectives. A vote against the resolution is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Workplace Safety Policies and Practices

Proponent: The SOC Investment Group.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request the Board of Directors of Yum! Brands, Inc. ("the Company") commission an independent third-party audit on the impact of the Company's policies and practices on the safety and well-being of workers throughout all Company-branded operations. Shareholders argue the following: "Workplace violence is recognized as a national cause for concern. The U.S. Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) states that acts of violence and other injuries are the third leading cause of fatal occupational injury in the U.S.¹ and that "workplace violence is a major concern for employers and employees nationwide."² It is in the best interests of Yum!, its shareholders and employees to conduct an audit of its policies and practices and take action to limit employee exposure to health and safety risks. Yum!'s ability to attract and retain employees is particularly important to the company's long-term success, particularly given the high turnover in this industry. Yum! Workers are frequently exposed to safety risks from customers. In 2023, Taco Bell workers in Detroit were threatened by a customer with violence, and another in North Carolina was shot by a customer. In 2024 a Taco Bell worker in Texas was shot and killed during a robbery and other workers in South Carolina and Illinois were also victims of gun violence."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Company has adopted best-in-class industry standards to safeguard the well-being and safety of its workforce while proactively addressing and mitigating issues related to workplace violence. As a founding member of the Restaurant Loss Prevention and Security Association (RLPSA), the Company regularly engages with other key stakeholders in the quick-service restaurant (QSR) sector to exchange insights, discuss emerging trends, and share best practices. These interactions also facilitate ongoing collaboration with RLPSA members to refine industry standards and develop cutting-edge crisis management strategies. These activities benefit the entire QSR sector, including the Company's franchisees. [...] Employees in Company-owned stores and RSCs are specifically trained to report all workplace safety concerns or potential violations of the Code of Conduct to their manager, HR representative or through the Company's Speak Up helpline, which is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Reports made via the Speak Up helpline may be made by phone or online on an anonymous or non-anonymous basis. Employees of franchisees are also able to report workplace safety concerns through the Speak Up helpline, which the applicable brand will then direct to the applicable franchisee to initiate follow-up and investigation. All complaints or incidents of workplace violence or reprisal are promptly reported to either Company or franchise management. If a situation is deemed urgent or a high threat, law enforcement will be promptly notified."

PIRC Analysis: : The request to undertake an independent review of management and practice that would improve workplace safety and reduce violence is increasing trend towards ethical investors. It is also in shareholders' interests as it will reduce and eliminate risks from the company's operations, including reputational ones, while maximising opportunities (in terms of recruitment, retention and motivation) from being perceived as an employer that cares for the health and safety of its employees. It is crucial for a company to conduct thorough evaluations of its practices and incorporate diverse feedback to uncover any biases or deficiencies. Shortcomings that are linked to health and safety should be transparently addressed and proactively improved. Failure to do so, or even worse concealing them, could lead to compliance, operational and legal risks, in addition to the already mentioned reputational ones.

22. Authorise the Board to Increase the Number of Shares Issued in case of Exceptional Demand

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 15%, in case of exceptional demand.

A green shoe authorisation enables an authorization of additional shares in the event of exceptional public demand. In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 15% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. GAMES WORKSHOP GROUP PLC EGM - 15-05-2025

01. Approve Remuneration Policy

Introduction & Background: At the Company's AGM on 18 September 2024, a notable minority of shareholders opposed the advisory and binding votes on the directors' remuneration report and policy. Following this, and in alignment with the UK Corporate Governance Code, the Board engaged in consultation with shareholders representing approximately 56% of the issued share capital. This process revealed concerns about the lack of share-based compensation and transparency in bonus awards. In response, the Board has proposed a revised remuneration policy for approval at this General Meeting.

Proposal: The resolution seeks shareholder approval to adopt a revised directors' remuneration policy. Key changes include the introduction of a Triennial Share Award, a one-off restricted share award for the CEO, increased bonus opportunities, and formal in- and post-employment share ownership requirements. The new policy also clarifies and enhances disclosure around performance assessments for bonus payments.

Rationale: The proposed policy updates aim to align executive remuneration with shareholder interests and best practices among FTSE-listed companies. The Board believes these measures will enhance transparency, provide competitive compensation to attract and retain executive talent, and reflect the long-term strategic priorities of the business. Notably, the inclusion of share-based awards addresses previous shareholder concerns and incentivizes long-term performance.

PIRC Recommendation: It is proposed to approve the remuneration policy. Variable remuneration appears to be consistently capped, although the pay-out may exceed 200% of fixed salary. There are claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is welcomed. The Company has disclosed quantified targets for performance criteria for the entirety of its variable remuneration component. Nevertheless, opposition is recommended based on excessiveness concerns.

02. Approve of the 2025 Share Awards Plan

Introduction & Background: The Plan forms a key component of the newly proposed remuneration framework. Designed by the Remuneration Committee following consultations with shareholders, it introduces structured share-based incentives to complement the company's strategic cycles and long-term growth ambitions.

Proposal: This resolution seeks approval for the Games Workshop Group PLC 2025 Share Awards Plan. The Plan encompasses two main elements: (1) a Restricted Share Award for the CEO contingent upon continued employment, and (2) Triennial Share Awards tied to financial performance metrics. The Plan also allows the Board to implement analogous plans for employees outside the UK, subject to local regulations.

Rationale: The introduction of the Share Awards Plan is intended to bolster the Company's ability to offer competitive and motivating equity-based remuneration. By directly linking executive rewards to financial performance and service continuity, the Plan supports strategic alignment with shareholder interests. It also serves to correct the prior lack of equity incentives identified by some shareholders, thereby fostering sustained executive engagement and corporate stability.

PIRC Recommendation: The Board proposes the approval of a new equity-based incentive plan. Under the plan, participants will be allotted shares that will vest over a three-year period. Performance targets have been quantified at this time, which is above market practice. However, the potential total reward raises excessiveness concerns (together with other incentives) and the vesting period of three years is considered to be short term. Opposition is recommended.

It is considered that the Chair of Nominating & Governance Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure. As the Chair of the Nominating & Governance Committee is not up for election, members of the committee are held accountable for this lack of disclosure. As the Chair of the Nominating & Governance Committee is not up for election, the members of the Nominating & Governance Committee are considered to be accountable for the Company's sustainability programme, and given the concerns over the Company's sustainability policies and practice, an oppose vote is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Third-Party Evaluation of Greenhouse Gas Emissions Reduction Targets

Proponent Shareholder: The Office of the Comptroller of the City of New York, on behalf of the Boards of Trustees of the New York City Teachers' Retirement System, the New York City Employees' Retirement System, and the New York City Police Pension Fund

Proponent's argument: The shareholder proposal urges Alliant Energy to enhance transparency by commissioning and disclosing an independent third-party evaluation of its short and medium term greenhouse gas emissions reduction targets to ensure alignment with the goals of the Paris Agreement. The proponent underscores the strategic importance of Paris-aligned emissions reductions, particularly within the U.S. electricity sector, which the International Energy Agency identifies as pivotal for achieving global net-zero targets by 2050. The proposal emphasises that while Alliant has publicly committed to achieving net-zero emissions by 2050 and a 50% reduction by 2030, the company has not obtained third-party verification confirming the scientific robustness or Paris alignment of its methodology. Citing a recent Transition Pathway Initiative (TPI) report, the proponent notes that Alliant's 2030 targets significantly exceed the carbon intensity benchmarks compatible with 1.5°C and 2°C pathways. Investors are concerned that without external validation, Alliant's targets may lack credibility and fail to meet necessary standards for mitigating climate risk. Therefore, the proposal calls for an independent third-party assessment to enhance investor confidence and ensure meaningful climate action.

Company's response: The Board recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, asserting that Alliant Energy has already fulfilled its objectives. The company highlights its Clean Energy Vision, which includes a 50% GHG emissions reduction target by 2030 and a net-zero goal by 2050, supported by strategic actions such as retiring coal plants and investing in renewable energy. The company commissioned the Electric Power Research Institute (EPRI), an independent scientific body, to evaluate its climate strategy and emissions targets. The EPRI study concluded that Alliant's targets are aligned with the Paris Agreement goals, and its findings are publicly disclosed in the company's Climate Report. The Board argues that engaging an additional third party for validation would be redundant and an inefficient use of resources. EPRI is portrayed as both independent and technically qualified, with no conflict of interest. Alliant asserts that its reporting framework, based on the Task Force on Climate related Financial Disclosures (TCFD), provides sufficient transparency. The company emphasises ongoing progress, including a 38% CO2 reduction since 2005 and 3.3 GW of renewable capacity installed. In conclusion, the Board sees no added value in the proposal and urges shareholders to reject it.

PIRC analysis: The proponent is seeking additional disclosure on the alignment of Alliant Energy's emissions reduction targets with the Paris Agreement goals, supported by independent third-party evaluation. While the company has provided some analysis through the EPRI study, shareholders may consider further assurance valuable to assess the robustness and credibility of the targets. Clear and comprehensive climate related disclosure enables investors to better evaluate how the company is managing transition risks and opportunities. Additional information, particularly regarding alignment with a 1.5°C scenario, could help shareholders make more informed decisions and strengthen confidence in the company's long-term climate strategy. Support is recommended.

Total variable pay could reach up to 250% of salary, and if executives achieve overperformance under the RSP (Restricted Share Plan) award, it could rise to 283% of salary, which is considered excessive as it exceeds the proposed 200% threshold. Regarding the Annual Bonus, if the maximum bonus opportunity exceeds 100% of salary, up to one-third of the total bonus earned (rather than only the portion above 100%) will be deferred into Company shares for two years; however, this is not considered adequate, and it would be preferable for 50% of the bonus to be paid in cash and 50% to be deferred into shares for at least three years. The RSP (Restricted Share Plan) award does not incorporate any non-financial performance measures, resulting in a remuneration policy that focuses solely on financial KPIs, many of which are outside an individual executive's control, rather than linking pay to the operational performance of the business or individual contributions. Although the performance period for the RSB is three years, which is not regarded as sufficiently long-term, the subsequent two-year holding period is welcomed. It is also noted positively that malus and clawback provisions apply to all forms of variable pay.

CDW CORP AGM - 20-05-2025

Proponent: John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the board of directors take such steps as may be necessary to permit written consent by shareholders entitled to cast the minimum number of votes that would be necessary to authorize the action at a meeting at which all shareholders entitled to vote thereon were present and voting. This includes shareholder ability to initiate any appropriate topic for written consent. Shareholder argue the following: "This proposal won 78% support at the 2022 CDW annual meeting. It is important for CDW shareholders to have a right to act by written consent especially at a company like CDW which has a deceptive shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting. The deceptive CDW right to call a special shareholder meeting claims that 25% of CDW shares outstanding can call a special shareholder meeting. But it then mandates that certain CEW [sic] shares are 100% disqualified from participating in calling for a special shareholder meeting. At a given time 25% of CDW shares could be disqualified CDW shares. Then in reality it would take more than 33% of the remaining qualified CDW shares to call for a special shareholder meeting which is a high standard to meet in a limited amount of time. It would be difficult to find another company that has a worse right for its shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Following the 2022 annual meeting, we conducted a robust outreach effort, reaching out to holders of approximately 63% of our outstanding common stock and receiving feedback from holders representing about 37% of shares. The results were clear: not a single stockholder expressed a preference for written consent over special meeting rights. All feedback either supported special meeting rights or expressed no preference. Furthermore, 91% of the shares that provided feedback thought that a special meeting right with a 25% threshold would be responsive to the Proponent's 2022 proposal for written consent that received majority support. [...] he Board believes that these and other corporate governance practices and policies enable stockholders to act in support of their interests while avoiding the risks associated with stockholder action by written consent, and that implementation of this proposal is not in the best interests of stockholders or the Company. Unlike written consents, taking action at stockholder meetings allows for accurate and complete information about the proposed stockholder action to be widely distributed, ensuring an opportunity for well-informed discussion and consideration of the merits of the proposed action. This proposal would circumvent the protections, procedural safeguards and advantages provided to all stockholders by stockholder meetings."

PIRC analysis: There are emergency situations where convening a special meeting might take too long or be too difficult, and written consents may be gathered more quickly. Since the company has weak or no special meeting rights, written consent rights are very important. A vote for the resolution is recommended.

CHARLES RIVER LABS INTL INC AGM - 20-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Animal Welfare

Proponent Shareholder: People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)

Proponent's argument: The proponent, PETA, requests that the Board annually report to shareholders detailed information regarding the importation of nonhuman primates (NHPs) into the U.S., Canada, European Union, and United Kingdom. This includes species imported, country of origin, whether wild caught or captive bred, infectious disease screening details, pathogens detected, and measures taken to mitigate impacts on wild populations. The supporting statement notes that the company is a major importer of endangered long-tailed macaques, with alleged supply chain links to unethical practices, illegal wildlife trafficking, and public health risks such as tuberculosis outbreaks and Tier 1 Select Agent bacteria. The proponent asserts that despite claims of animal welfare and health surveillance, the company fails to provide transparent health reporting for primates. The SEC and U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service investigations into the company's practices are ongoing. Increased transparency is urged to protect public health, corporate reputation, and support ethical standards.

Company's response: The Company recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, citing that it already issues an annual Non-Human Primate (NHP) Report addressing sourcing, health screening, and animal welfare, informed by extensive shareholder engagement. The Company argues that the proposal would require disclosure of proprietary information, restrict business operations, and duplicate existing disclosures. It emphasises that NHP use is critical for scientific research, including vaccine development, and that it maintains compliance with national and international animal welfare laws. The Company rejects claims of endangered status for Macaca fascicularis, citing CITES Appendix II designation and U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service findings. The Company underscores its commitment to ethical sourcing, alternatives to animal testing, and collaboration with regulatory bodies. Past similar proposals were overwhelmingly rejected by shareholders, reinforcing the Board's view that existing practices adequately address the concerns raised.

PIRC analysis: While it is clear that the company has introduced measures such as supplier due diligence, audits, and reporting through its NHP Report to reinforce legal compliance and ethical standards within its primate sourcing practices, these actions do not amount to a formal, transparent vendor policy explicitly focused on the safe, humane, and ethical treatment of nonhuman primates across its entire supply chain. Furthermore, although the company acknowledges the importance of transparency and animal welfare, it continues to resist reasonable shareholder demands for enhanced disclosure on critical factors such as origin, health status, and species specific impacts, citing concerns over proprietary information. Given the ongoing regulatory investigations and the material reputational and public health risks highlighted, the company's opposition to the resolution appears inconsistent with its stated commitments to ethical practices and stakeholder engagement. The shareholder request for a detailed annual report is considered proportionate and reasonable. Support is recommended.

METRO BANK HOLDINGS PLC AGM - 20-05-2025

4. Approve the Shareholder Value Alignment Plan \(SVAP\)

It is proposed that shareholders approve the Shareholder Value Alignment Plan (SVAP), which will be open to all employees, including Executive Directors, of the Company and its subsidiaries. No awards under the SVAP may be granted after the tenth anniversary of its shareholder approval, nor may any awards be structured to vest beyond that date. The first grants are planned for May 2025, contingent upon the participant's satisfactory conduct in the preceding year and the Company maintaining sound capital and liquidity. These prerequisites must be met for each subsequent award, though the People and Remuneration Committee may revise the criteria to ensure legal and regulatory compliance. Each SVAP award will take the form of a nil-cost option (an SVAP Option), allowing the participant to acquire shares in the Company upon vesting. Vesting is subject to performance criteria including growth from a defined market value baseline (subject to a minimum growth hurdle), a time-based vesting condition, additional performance underpins, and any other terms set at the time of grant by the Committee. Awards may cover up to 5% of the Value Pool (the "Management Pool"), with individual grants capped at 2.5%. The total number of shares issued or transferred under the SVAP-together with those under any other Company or predecessor share plan, including all-employee plans-will not exceed 10% of the Company's issued share capital over any ten-year period. SVAP Options become exercisable only once both the growth performance and time-based conditions are fulfilled, and participants must comply with holding requirements upon exercise. While increasing employee shareholding is generally viewed as a positive governance measure that enhances alignment between employees and shareholders, it is noted that executives are also beneficiaries; therefore, on balance, opposition to the proposal is recommended.

HONEYWELL INTERNATIONAL INC. AGM - 20-05-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent: John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the Board of Directors adopt an enduring policy, and amend the governing documents as necessary in order that 2 separate people hold the office of the Chairman and the office of the CEO. Shareholders argue the following: "Whenever possible, the Chairman of the Board shall be an Independent Director. The Board has the discretion to select a Temporary Chairman of the Board who is not an Independent Director to serve while the Board is seeking an Independent Chairman of the Board on an expedited basis. It is a best practice to adopt this policy soon. However this policy could be phased in when there is a contract renewal for our current CEO or for the next CEO transition. The roles of Chairman and CEO are fundamentally different and should be held by 2 directors, a CEO and a Chairman who is completely independent of the CEO and our company."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Our Board is best positioned to determine the most effective leadership structure to protect and enhance long-term shareowner value in light of the unique opportunities and challenges that the Company may face at any particular time. The Board believes that the current leadership model provides strong and consistent leadership and independent and effective oversight of the Company's business and affairs.[...] All but one of Honeywell's directors are independent. In addition, all members of our Board committees are independent, which ensures that oversight of critical matters, such as the integrity of Honeywell's financial statements, the compensation of our executive officers, the selection and evaluation of directors, and the development of corporate governance policies and practices, among other matters, is entrusted to independent directors. The Board and each of its committees have unrestricted access to Honeywell's officers, and employees and have the authority to ask questions and conduct investigations and to retain legal, accounting, financial, or other outside advisors as they deem necessary or appropriate to fulfill their duties. [...] The independent Lead Director is elected biennially by the independent directors to serve a two-year term. In 2024, Honeywell's independent directors elected Mr. Ayer to serve as independent Lead Director. Mr. Ayer has served on Honeywell's Board as an independent director for 10 years and brings to the role a deep knowledge of the Company and its transformation journey, as well as excellent working relationships with the other directors and Honeywell's management. Mr. Ayer's experience leading a large public company over three decades of leadership roles at Alaska Air Group, his aerospace expertise, which aligns with the Future of Aviation, one of our three megatrends, and his governance experience enable him to serve as an effective and independent Lead Director."

SHELL PLC AGM - 20-05-2025

22. Shareholder Proposal on LNG Strategy Alignment with Climate Commitments

Proponent's argument: The shareholder proposal requests Shell plc to disclose by the 2026 AGM whether and how its forecasts and targets related to liquefied natural gas (LNG) - including demand forecasts, production and sales targets, and capital expenditure - are consistent with its climate commitments, particularly its 2050 net-zero emissions target. The proponents argue that Shell's LNG demand assumptions are significantly higher than those of the International Energy Agency (IEA), including scenarios like STEPS, APS, and NZE, raising concerns about the validity and risk exposure of Shell's strategic assumptions. They highlight Shell's significant exposure to LNG price volatility due to its large uncontracted LNG portfolio and note a lack of responsiveness in Shell's outlook to shifting energy market dynamics. Furthermore, they question how Shell plans to achieve net-zero goals if high LNG demand projections materialize, suggesting that such levels could only be reconciled with unrealistic reliance on negative emissions technologies. The resolution seeks granular disclosure on methodologies and assumptions, enabling shareholders to better assess risk, alignment with climate goals, and the company's long-term financial health in light of global energy transitions. Investors seek greater transparency as LNG is projected to comprise 30% of Shell's upstream output by 2030, and the company plans to expand liquefaction capacity by 25-30% in that period.

Company's response: Shell's Board opposes Resolution 22 and urges shareholders to vote against it, citing concerns over governance and redundancy. As a Special Resolution, it would become a binding component of Shell's constitution, which the Board argues is an inappropriate mechanism for requesting disclosures. Shell states the requested information is already largely disclosed via its Annual Reports, Energy Transition Strategy, Shell LNG Outlook, and various scenario publications, including the newly launched "Surge" scenario. Shell maintains that its current disclosures, including Note 4 on Climate Change and Energy Transition, offer extensive insights into LNG strategy, scenario analysis, portfolio competitiveness, and stranded asset risks. The Board stresses that LNG is vital for global energy security and transition, being more flexible and less carbon-intensive than coal or oil. They reaffirm alignment between LNG strategy and Shell's net-zero targets, claiming projected growth sits below Shell's NZE-aligned "Horizon" scenario. The company pledges to consolidate its LNG-related disclosures into a single summary note to be published by the 2026 AGM. It will include comparisons with IEA and third-party scenarios, financial resilience analysis, and emissions implications. However, Shell argues the resolution adds little value and bypasses shareholder engagement norms.

PIRC Recommendation: The proposal addresses a critical area of financial and climate-related risk, given Shell's heavy reliance on Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG) within its growth strategy. The company's demand assumptions significantly exceed those outlined by the IEA, creating concerns about the credibility and resilience of its planning framework. The resolution seeks reasonable disclosure around the assumptions, methodologies and alignment of LNG-related investment decisions with Shell's stated net-zero commitments. Given the scale of Shell's exposure to LNG markets, including a high proportion of uncontracted supply, improved transparency is warranted to allow shareholders to evaluate the robustness of the company's strategy and its climate alignment. The requested information is not commercially sensitive and is in line with evolving expectations on climate-related financial disclosure. As such, this resolution is considered a proportionate and necessary step to strengthen investor confidence and accountability. Support is recommended.

MCDONALD'S CORPORATION AGM - 20-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Advisory Vote on Report Related to Oversight of Advertising Risks

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Bowyer Research on behalf of the Bahnsen Family Trust

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that McDonald's produce a report evaluating its oversight of advertising related risks, particularly those involving the alleged suppression or exclusion of viewpoints based on political or religious affiliations. The resolution claims that McDonald's, through participation in the Global Alliance for Responsible Media (GARM), contributed to industry wide censorship by aligning with agencies and associations that promoted content moderation frameworks based on subjective criteria like "disinformation," "insensitive," or "debated sensitive social issues." Citing the high concentration of ad-buying power within GARM and its subsequent dissolution following public scrutiny and a lawsuit from X (formerly Twitter), the proposal argues that such alliances present legal and reputational risks. The proponents point to practices that may amount to viewpoint discrimination and express concern about McDonald's association with organisations like the Global Disinformation Index and NewsGuard. They contend that greater transparency is necessary to assure shareholders and the public that advertising decisions align with principles of free speech and religious liberty. By evaluating these risks and practices, McDonald's can protect brand integrity and legal standing while rebuilding public trust.

Company's Response: McDonald's Board recommends a vote against the proposal, asserting that the requested report is unnecessary due to the company's existing risk management and advertising governance structures. The Board emphasises that McDonald's advertising strategy is centered around customer experience, value, cultural relevance, and brand trust, and is guided by its "Feel-Good Marketing" approach. Oversight of advertising is embedded in the company's leadership structure through its Chief Marketing Officer and Chief Impact Officer, with cross functional executive involvement. The company highlights that its global marketing decisions, including those made by franchisees, are made independently and grounded in brand safety, not political alignment. The Board also points to the enterprise risk management (ERM) framework which monitors reputational and strategic risks, including those associated with marketing, and involves escalation to the CEO and the Board when warranted. McDonald's states that it already provides appropriate oversight and transparency, and the requested evaluation would be duplicative and not materially beneficial to shareholders. The Board concludes that its current governance systems are sufficient to address the concerns raised and therefore recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The proposal requests additional disclosures regarding how McDonald's oversees risks related to alleged viewpoint discrimination in its advertising decisions. While transparency around advertising and brand safety policies can contribute to accountability and reputational risk management, this particular resolution raises concerns. It originates from a right-wing advocacy group and reflects broader campaigns aimed at curbing corporate alignment with environmental, social, or governance (ESG) standards under the banner of defending free speech and religious freedom. The language and rationale of the proposal - including references to political and religious viewpoint protection indicate that it is intended to discourage companies from participating in industry-wide brand safety frameworks or ESG aligned advertising partnerships. These types of proposals have increasingly been used as spoiler or reactionary resolutions, aiming to limit companies' engagement with responsible business practices, particularly on social or ethical issues. McDonald's has already articulated a risk oversight structure that includes advertising practices, and its existing governance mechanisms appear sufficient to address relevant brand and reputational risks. Given the ideological nature of the resolution and its limited potential to enhance long-term shareholder value, opposition is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Advisory Vote on Disclosure on Climate Transition Plans

Proponent Shareholder: Green Century

Proponent's argument: Green Century asks McDonald's to disclose an assessment evaluating whether its current climate transition strategies and resource commitments are sufficient to achieve its 2030 and 2050 greenhouse gas (GHG) reduction targets. The proponent notes that beef production alone accounts for roughly one-third of the company's total GHG emissions and points to scientific consensus that livestock-related emissions must significantly decline to meet climate thresholds. The proposal cites material risks McDonald's faces if it fails to adapt-ranging from supply chain volatility and competitive lag due to lack of alternative proteins, to potential legal exposure through partnerships with suppliers under regulatory scrutiny, such as JBS and Tyson. The resolution urges the company to provide forward-looking, quantitative disclosures to determine if current measures align with climate goals. Specifically, the proponent recommends disclosing the impact of current actions, evaluating the emissions implications of livestock dependency, and setting protein diversification targets. The intention is to provide shareholders with greater clarity on whether McDonald's climate commitments are credible and achievable under current strategies, or whether further steps are needed.

Company's Response: The Board unanimously recommends a vote against Proposal 5, arguing that the requested disclosure is unnecessary given the company's existing climate strategy and public reporting. McDonald's climate goals have been validated by the Science Based Targets initiative (SBTi), and the company has released a Climate Resiliency Summary aligned with the Task Force on Climate-Related Financial Disclosures (TCFD) framework. It reports regularly on emissions, expects suppliers to set reduction targets, and acknowledges that Scope 3 emissions-especially from franchisees and supply chains-pose external challenges to achieving its goals. Furthermore, the company states it is already preparing to comply with emerging global climate disclosure mandates, which are expected to be resource-intensive and rigorous. The board contends that the additional report requested by this proposal would be duplicative and costly, potentially distracting from compliance efforts and existing workstreams. Therefore, in the Board's view, the resolution would not meaningfully improve transparency or shareholder value, and a vote against the proposal is recommended.

PIRC analysis: The report will be consistent with the recommendations of the Task Force on Climate-related Financial Disclosures (TCFD). It will also include the evolution of emissions of the different business activities, facilities and assets over which the company maintains control, and will indicate annual progress with respect to the Greenhouse Gas Emissions Reduction Plan. The report on the climate strategy will be submitted each year to the ordinary general meeting.

Given the severity of the climate crisis, it is considered that companies should rely to every measure possible must be taken by investee companies to facilitate a net zero carbon transition, as well as to include shareholders and stakeholders in this process. With this respect, the Say on Climate mechanism is an important step in improving the quality and level of the disclosures and the company's plans to reduce them in line with its commitments. An advisory vote on the company's climate strategy, as well as a vote on the progresses made towards achieving the goals sets therein, is considered to be in the long-term interests of shareholders. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Advisory Vote to Revisit DEI in Executive Compensation

Proponent Shareholder: National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The National Legal and Policy Center (NLPC) requests that McDonald's Board revisit its executive compensation policies and consider eliminating DEI-based performance metrics from incentive plans. The proposal cites growing legal and reputational risks following the 2023 U.S. Supreme Court decision on affirmative action, which has triggered a broader reassessment of DEI initiatives across institutions and corporations. NLPC argues that linking executive pay to diversity quotas such as McDonald's goals for women and underrepresented groups in leadership, and for supplier diversity may expose the company to litigation under anti-discrimination statutes, particularly Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. The proposal claims that DEI-linked incentives could constitute discriminatory practices, and points to recent high-profile lawsuits as evidence of mounting liability and scrutiny. It further asserts that McDonald's current structure, which allocates 15% of short-term incentive plan payouts to human capital metrics, lacks sufficient GAAP basis and may open the door to regulatory or compliance challenges. The resolution calls for greater caution and urges a compensation review that removes DEI as a performance metric to reduce legal exposure and restore neutrality in executive pay structures.

Company's Response: The Board recommends a vote against the proposal, stating that it is unnecessary and overly prescriptive. The Compensation Committee already conducts a comprehensive annual review of executive compensation, with input from shareholders and independent consultants, to ensure alignment with the company's strategy and long-term shareholder value creation. The Committee's approach includes evaluation of both financial and non-financial metrics, including those that reflect progress on values such as inclusion and community impact. McDonald's emphasises that these metrics are consistent with its business priorities and strategic goals, and are adjusted yearly to reflect current priorities. For example, in 2024 and 2025, a Strategic Scorecard was introduced to capture qualitative efforts around culture, franchising, and inclusion. The company argues that shareholders have generally supported its Say-on-Pay proposals, and the Committee maintains full independence and expertise to set appropriate metrics. The Board also expresses concern that adopting the proposal would undermine the Committee's business judgment and flexibility to adapt pay structures. As such, the Board concludes the resolution would not benefit shareholders and recommends voting against it.

PIRC analysis: Increased scrutiny of how ESG factors are embedded into executive pay is appropriate and, in principle, greater transparency and alignment of performance incentives with long-term sustainability goals can benefit shareholders. However, this resolution appears to be ideologically driven and rooted in a flawed interpretation of fiduciary and legal risk. The proponent seeks to eliminate DEI-related metrics from compensation structures, presenting them as inherently discriminatory and legally dubious, while offering no evidence that the company's current practices violate existing law or materially harm shareholder value. The proposal mischaracterises DEI goals as "quotas" and frames human capital management as a legal liability, overlooking the substantial body of evidence that suggests companies with strong diversity strategies perform better over time and face lower reputational and governance risks. Moreover, McDonald's has clearly disclosed that its human capital metrics are subject to annual review by an independent Compensation Committee and represent a small portion of short-term incentives. The resolution would inappropriately restrict board discretion and undermine evolving best practice in human capital oversight. On balance, a vote against the resolution is recommended.

6.. Amend Certificate of Incorporation to Reflect New Delaware Law Provisions Regarding Officer Exculpation

It is proposed that the Restated Certificate of Incorporation of Juniper, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to take the steps necessary to amend the appropriate company governing documents to give the owners of a combined 10% of our outstanding common stock the power to call a special shareholder meeting or the owners of the lowest percentage of shareholders, as governed by state law, the power to call a special shareholder meeting. Shareholders argue the following: "A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting, as called for in this proposal, can help make shareholder engagement meaningful. A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting will help ensure that the Verisk Analytics Board and management engages with shareholders in good faith because shareholders will have a viable Plan B by calling for a special shareholder meeting. To guard against the Verisk Analytics Board of Directors becoming complacent shareholders need the ability to call a special shareholder meeting to help the Board adopt new strategies when the need arises. This proposal topic is now more important than ever because there has been a mad rush of Board exculpation proposals to limit the financial liability of directors when they violate their fiduciary duty. This is a disincentive for improved director performance. Since a special shareholder meeting can be called to replace a director, adoption of this proposal could foster better performance by our directors."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Board believes that the combined 10% ownership threshold for calling a special meeting in the shareholder proposal is not in the best interests of the Company. Instead, the Board recommends in the Management Proposal set forth in Item 7 that shareholders approve an amendment to the Certificate of Incorporation to enable the Board to provide one or more shareholders as a group owning at least 25% or more of outstanding shares the right to call a special meeting. In the Board's view, this ownership threshold strikes an appropriate balance between allowing a meaningful number of shareholders to exercise the right to raise issues in between annual meetings, and the necessary diversion of management's time and resources from responding to shareholder requests to call special meetings. For a detailed discussion, see the Management Proposal set forth in Item 7 of this Proxy Statement. [...] In light of these considerations regarding the Company's corporate governance framework, including management's proposal to enable the adoption of a special shareholder meeting right with a 25% ownership threshold, the Board believes that this proposal is unnecessary and not in the best interests of the Company and its shareholders."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

Disclosure: All elements of the Single Total Remuneration Table are adequately disclosed. The CEO's cash salary increase was below that of the wider workforce at 5%. The CEO's salary is in the upper quartile of PIRC's comparator group, which raises some concerns of excessiveness.

Balance: The CEO's total variable pay for the year under review was 232.24% of the fixed salary, which is deemed somewhat excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 200%. The CEO's pay ratio was 36:1, which is deemed excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 20:1.

2. Approve Remuneration Policy

The 2024 remuneration policy for IWG plc introduced several key changes to its incentive schemes. The maximum annual bonus opportunity was increased from 150% to 200% of salary, with a reduction in the deferral requirement from 50% to 20% for executives who meet the 300% shareholding guideline, while clawback and malus provisions remain unchanged. For long-term incentives, the maximum award was raised from 250% to 300% of salary, with added flexibility for the Remuneration Committee to grant awards under either a Performance Share Plan (PSP) or Restricted Share Plan (RSP), depending on context. A performance multiplier of up to 1.33x was also introduced for PSPs, triggered by exceptional relative shareholder returns. The structure of vesting and holding periods remains largely unchanged, preserving the three-year vesting and two-year holding pattern for PSPs and a three-year vesting with performance underpin for RSPs.

It is proposed to approve the Performance Share Plan of International Workplace Group plc, under which share-based awards may be granted to executives subject to performance conditions and potential holding periods. The plan allows awards in the form of Conditional Awards or Options, with dividend equivalents and a vesting structure that typically spans five years. Governance features include a 10% dilution cap over ten years, malus and clawback provisions, and a maximum award limit of 300% of salary (with RSP awards valued at double). Awards under this plan are capped at 300% of salary in conjunction with the Performance Share Plan, with RSP awards valued at double. JPMORGAN CHASE & CO. AGM - 20-05-2025

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The shareholder, John Chevedden, requests that JPMorgan Chase amend its governing documents to require that the roles of Chair of the Board and Chief Executive Officer (CEO) be held by two different individuals. The proposal advocates for the Chairman to be an independent director whenever possible, although a temporary non-independent Chairman may be appointed while searching for an independent candidate. The shareholder argues that separation of these roles is a governance best practice that enhances board independence and oversight. The proposal highlights the strong 47% shareholder support achieved at the 2021 JPM annual meeting despite management opposition and extensive corporate solicitation efforts. It contends that actual support among informed investors exceeded 50%, considering that many votes opposed were likely from uninformed shareholders without access to independent voting advice. The proponent criticises JPMorgan's prior actions, asserting that the company's existing policy allowing combination of the roles under broad exceptions is deceptive and inadequate. Additional concerns are raised regarding the independence of the current Lead Independent Director, whose 21-year tenure is seen as undermining independence. The shareholder stresses the urgent need for a truly independent board leader to ensure proper oversight and avoid potential conflicts of interest, arguing that phasing in the policy during the next CEO transition is reasonable and in the best interests of shareholders.

Company's response: The Board of JPMorgan Chase recommends voting against this proposal. It argues that the company's combined leadership structure has led to outstanding long-term performance, innovation, and strong shareholder returns under the leadership of Mr. Dimon as both Chair and CEO. The Board contends that mandating a permanent separation of the roles would remove necessary flexibility to adapt governance practices to changing circumstances. It emphasises that the Board annually reviews the leadership structure and has historically separated the roles during half of the last six management transitions. The response asserts that robust independent oversight is provided through the empowered Lead Independent Director role and a majority independent Board. The Board challenges the proposal's claim of majority support in 2021, noting that the 47% figure does not constitute a majority. It defends the 2022 enhancements to Corporate Governance Principles, which anticipate separation of roles at the next CEO transition subject to the Board's discretion. The Board asserts that the proposal mischaracterises governance practices and misleads shareholders. It maintains that an inflexible policy would be detrimental to shareholders' interests and that there is no consensus among large U.S. companies for mandating such separation. Overall, the Board believes that the current structure, coupled with rigorous oversight and flexibility, best serves shareholders' long-term interests and supports continued superior performance.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Social Impacts of Transition Finance

Proponent Shareholder: Paul Rissman

Proponent's argument: The shareholder, Paul Rissman, requests that JPMorgan Chase prepare a report disclosing whether and how the Company addresses potential risks and opportunities related to the social impacts of its transition finance activities. Transition finance, supporting the decarbonisation of high-emitting industries or other sectors, is a key component of JPM's business, with significant investments under its Center for Carbon Transition. The proponent stresses that beyond technical challenges, the human and social aspects of the climate transition are critical and can either support or derail the transition process. Issues like job losses in carbon-intensive industries, human rights conflicts surrounding mining operations, and unequal distribution of green job opportunities can provoke resistance to transition initiatives. Studies cited by the proponent show that social conflicts have successfully halted major projects, highlighting the business risk of ignoring these factors. The World Economic Forum warns that the green transition could deepen unemployment in some regions, exacerbating political instability. Despite these significant risks, the proponent asserts that JPMorgan's public disclosures focus primarily on environmental aspects without sufficiently addressing the human dimensions of transition finance, particularly compared to peer banks. This lack of transparency limits investors' ability to assess how JPM's transition activities could impact social stability, community rights, and ultimately shareholder value. The report is therefore requested to close this gap and strengthen investor insight into JPM's management of transition-related social risks.

Company's response: The Board of JPMorgan Chase recommends voting against this proposal. It argues that the Firm already maintains a comprehensive approach to environmental and social (E&S) risk management across its business activities. JPMorgan states that the issues raised in the proposal stem from broad socio-economic factors that go beyond the specific scope of transition finance and are best addressed through public policy rather than through company-specific disclosures. The Firm asserts that a narrow focus solely on transition finance would distort risk assessments and miss the complexity of broader social and economic dynamics, such as automation, AI disruption, supply chain shifts, and evolving consumer demand. The Board emphasises that there is no universally accepted definition of "transition finance," creating ambiguity that would make standardised disclosure difficult and potentially misleading. JPMorgan already integrates E&S considerations into its client and transaction decision processes, using internal frameworks and maintaining transparency through existing reports, including its Climate Report, ESG Report, and other public documents. Additional disclosure on transition finance-specific social impacts is considered unnecessary, and may even undermine transparency efforts by introducing confusion without a clear industry benchmark. The Board stresses that it continues to invest in capabilities to manage environmental, climate, nature, and social risks in a holistic manner and supports sustainable community development. Therefore, shareholders are encouraged to vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: While the company appears to acknowledge and take account of the social impacts associated with transition finance to some degree, it is not clear that the company has done so to an extent that would meet the requests of the resolution. The integration of social and environmental concerns into the governance structure (including executive compensation, stakeholder and workforce engagement processes, and Board oversight) indicates some recognition of the importance of the issue. The company's disclosures, such as its Climate Report, set out examples of how worker and community needs are being considered during the transition to a low-carbon economy. However, the company's approach appears to fall short of a comprehensive, systemic commitment to managing the social dimensions of its transition finance activities. While the company explains how in certain cases staff may be transitioned into green jobs and away from fossil-fuel sectors, it is not clear if these efforts are sufficiently scaled to offset overall job losses or to mitigate broader community impacts. Furthermore, it is unclear how the concept of a just transition is embedded within the company's overall climate strategy and transition finance initiatives. Although the Board discusses sustainability issues, it is not apparent to what extent the social risks associated with transition finance form part of these discussions or are integrated into the company's governance approach. A just transition requires the full integration of environmental, social, and governance (ESG) factors as mutually reinforcing pillars of strategy, and this integration is not adequately demonstrated in the company's disclosures. Support is recommended.

THE TRAVELERS COMPANIES INC. AGM - 21-05-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Climate-Related Pricing and Coverage Decisions

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow, on behalf of FL Bell T/W fbo Roger de Freitas - CHW/E

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Travelers to expand its climate reporting by including the projected impact of climate-related pricing and coverage decisions on the sustainability of its homeowners' insurance business under a range of climate scenarios over near, medium, and long-term time frames. The proponent argues that rising climate-driven catastrophe losses-combined with reinsurance price hikes and inflation-are causing significant insurance market instability and higher premiums. Travelers, as a major insurer in high-risk areas like California, has responded to these pressures with rate increases and policy terminations, raising questions about the long-term viability of its personal insurance business. While acknowledging the firm's adjustments to pricing and terms, the proposal notes a lack of disclosure on how these decisions impact customer retention, profitability, and systemic financial risks tied to housing and municipal bond markets. The shareholder urges more transparency on projected policy cancellations, uninsurability rates, and exposure to potential bubbles tied to climate risks. The proponent argues this reporting is vital for assessing the financial resilience of Travelers' core insurance lines, given the growing cost of climate inaction and the company's continued investments in high-carbon industries.

Company's Response: The Board recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, asserting that it is overly prescriptive, based on flawed assumptions, and unnecessary given the company's existing disclosures. Travelers argues that it already provides extensive climate risk information, particularly through its TCFD-aligned reporting, which details its investment in proprietary models, underwriting practices, and catastrophe risk assessment capabilities. The company states that isolating one element of its multifaceted risk evaluation process-climate-related pricing and coverage-would not meaningfully inform investors and would misrepresent the complexity of underwriting decisions. Moreover, Travelers refutes several claims made by the proponent, including the assertion that climate change is the primary driver of underwriting losses, emphasizing that other factors like inflation, population shifts, and construction costs play a larger role. The company also disputes the accuracy of statements regarding policy cancellations and fossil fuel investments, arguing that its exposure is minimal and part of a broader, strategic transition effort. It concludes that fulfilling the proposal would divert management time and resources without delivering meaningful benefit to shareholders, and it is not aware of any peer insurer producing similar disclosures. Thus, the Board unanimously opposes the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The proposal seeks additional disclosure on how climate-related pricing and coverage decisions may impact the sustainability of the Company's homeowner insurance portfolio under different climate scenarios. Enhanced transparency on material climate risks and related business impacts would assist shareholders in assessing the Company's long-term strategy and resilience. Such information would also help ensure that the Board and management continue to give appropriate consideration to evolving climate-related risks and opportunities. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Golden Parachutes

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that the Board seek shareholder approval for any senior executive pay package that includes severance or termination payments exceeding 2.99 times the sum of base salary and target short-term bonus. It would apply specifically to Named Executive Officers and would require that such approval be sought even if such pay arrangements are part of otherwise standard compensation frameworks. The proponent argues this is a governance mechanism comparable to a speed limit-setting expectations and requiring consequences if thresholds are exceeded. The proposal does not impose pay limits or constrain equity compensation but instead ensures transparency and accountability for significant payouts. It emphasizes that the annual "say-on-pay" vote does not isolate golden parachute agreements, thereby necessitating a targeted mechanism. The proposal is presented as non-binding and intended to complement, not replace, existing oversight. Referencing majority support for similar resolutions at companies such as FedEx, Alaska Air, and AbbVie, the proponent asserts that ratifying golden parachutes through shareholder votes would improve Travelers' compensation governance practices and potentially its executive pay scores, which are currently low.

Company's Response: The Board unanimously recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that it is unnecessary and would undermine the Company's ability to make timely and competitive compensation decisions. The Board warns that requiring shareholder votes on certain severance arrangements could hinder recruitment and retention of executive talent, especially in time-sensitive negotiations. It notes that most peer companies do not require such votes and that adopting this policy would put Travelers at a competitive disadvantage. Furthermore, the Board believes that the Company's independent, fiduciary-duty-bound Compensation Committee is best positioned to evaluate and approve post-termination arrangements based on market data, strategic needs, and shareholder interests. The Company also highlights its robust shareholder engagement program and the annual advisory "say-on-pay" vote, which already provide shareholders with a mechanism to express views on executive compensation, including severance terms. Lastly, the Company maintains that its existing severance arrangements are reasonable, in line with market practices, and aligned with shareholder interests. Therefore, the Board concludes that the proposal is both redundant and potentially harmful to Travelers' executive compensation strategy.

PIRC analysis: The Company's concern that shareholder ratification of severance arrangements could limit flexibility or reduce competitiveness is not strongly substantiated. In many developed markets, such as France and Italy, shareholder approval of termination payments is standard practice and has not proven to hinder talent retention. Rather, this proposal represents a modest and reasonable step toward strengthening corporate governance by enhancing transparency and shareholder oversight of significant executive payouts. It would help align the interests of shareholders and management without imposing rigid compensation limits.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent: The Accountability Board, Inc.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board to adopt a policy and amend the governance documents as necessary to require that the CEO and Board Chair positions remain separate (i.e. continue to be held by different people). Shareholders argue the following: "Like the majority of S&P 500 companies, Amazon's CEO and Board Chair roles are separated, with Andy Jassy serving as CEO and Jeff Bezos as Executive Chair. The Board says this separation enhances its ability to focus on critical policy and operational issues, ultimately serving the long-term interests of shareholders. Indeed, separating the roles of Board Chair and CEO creates clear and unambiguous lines of authority. And at companies that separate the roles, this strong counterbalancing structure allows the Board to focus on corporate governance and oversight and the CEO to focus on the company's business. [...] With the positions currently separated, now would be an opportune time to do so. After all, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. And in an era of heightened scrutiny on corporate governance, this would reinforce Amazon's dedication to shareholders and long-term value creation."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Board believes that it is in our shareholders' best interests to maintain our current governance guidelines and processes, which authorize the Board to establish the leadership structure that it determines best supports the Company at any given time. In contrast, the prescriptive approach set forth in this proposal, if implemented, would simply limit the Board's ability in the future to tailor our leadership structure to align with the best interests of the Company and its shareholders, without regard to whatever circumstances exist at the time. In addition, in considering this proposal, the Board considered the fact that peer benchmarking data indicates the proposal's requested policy is not common practice. [...] The proposal objects to the Board's ability to "freely combine the roles [of CEO and Chair] at any time, for any reason." However, under Delaware corporate law, our Board must act in the best interests of the Company and its shareholders, including when making decisions regarding board leadership. Therefore, concerns about the Board carelessly changing our leadership structure without sufficient reasons are unfounded. [...] In addition, our existing corporate governance practices reinforce the Board's alignment with, and accountability to, shareholders. The Board's committee charters delineate the significant authority and responsibilities of the Board committees, and the Board as well as its committees can retain outside advisors to assist in the performance of their duties."

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Respect Civil Liberties in Advertising Services

Proponent: Oklahoma Tobacco Settlement Endowment Trust, represented by Bowyer Research.

Proponent's argument: This shareholder proposal addresses freedom of expression and discrimination in digital advertising, particularly in relation to Amazon's affiliations with external content moderation initiatives. The resolution calls on Amazon to evaluate and report on how it manages risks of discrimination against ad buyers or sellers based on political or religious viewpoints. The proponent argues that Amazon's involvement with the Global Alliance for Responsible Media (GARM) and related initiatives has potentially exposed the company to serious reputational, legal, and ethical risks. The resolution claims: "Amazon colluded with the world's largest advertising buyers... to demonetize platforms... for expressing disfavored political and religious viewpoints". GARM's mission to address "hate speech, bullying and disinformation" is described as a cover for vague and subjective censorship, with platforms judged on their handling of "debated sensitive social issues". It cites GARM's promotion of groups like NewsGuard and Global Disinformation Index, accusing them of labelling mainstream outlets as "disinformation". Specific actions, such as the GARM-coordinated pressure against Joe Rogan and Elon Musk's X, are presented as evidence of partisan bias and censorship pressure. The proponent asserts that these practices persist even after GARM's disbandment in 2024, with the "Big Six" agencies continuing similar policies. They conclude that Amazon's association with such groups may violate antitrust and anti-discrimination laws, and urge the company to "rebuild trust by providing transparency around these policies". The resolution asks Amazon's board to produce a report assessing how it oversees risks related to discrimination against ad buyers and sellers based on political or religious views.

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. Amazon recommends voting against the proposal. The company states that its policies are not designed to influence or suppress political or religious content. Rather, the goal is for "customers to experience relevant and useful ads", and to reach them effectively regardless of platform. "These policies and practices are not intended to promote or demote particular political or religious viewpoints". Amazon emphasizes its commitment to inclusivity, noting that it "serves customers, advertisers, and publishers that reflect a very broad range of viewpoints". The company asserts that it already maintains "robust risk management processes", including the oversight by the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee, which manages issues of human rights and ethical practices, and the Audit Committee, which handles broader operational risk assessments. It concludes that its existing governance mechanisms adequately address the concerns raised, and additional reporting is unnecessary.

PIRC Recommendation: The resolution frames complex advertising ecosystem decisions as conspiratorial ("colluded with... agencies") and treats voluntary brand alignment decisions as ideologically motivated suppression. In doing so, it advances a narrow conception of "free speech" that equates the lack of monetization with censorship, despite no legal or operational requirement for companies to fund or platform all content. The proposal is based on a selective and ideological reading of corporate responsibility and misrepresents Amazon's advertising strategy as politically motivated. The company already has appropriate oversight structures, and further reporting on this basis would entrench false narratives, distract from legitimate governance, and risk misuse of shareholder proposals for ideological agendas. Opposition is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Alternative Emissions Reporting

Proponent: Longview Largecap 500 Index Fund

Proponent's argument: This resolution concerns climate risk disclosure and greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions accounting, specifically requesting that Amazon expand its reporting of Scope 3 emissions to include all product sales for which it is the seller of record. The proponents argue that Amazon's current Scope 3 reporting is incomplete and fails to disclose material emissions associated with 99% of its retail sales, as it only includes private label products (which make up just "about 1%" of sales). The resolution asserts that: 1) Scope 3 emissions from product-related value chain activities-both upstream (manufacturing) and downstream (use and disposal)-represent the largest emissions source for most retailers; 2) Amazon's current practice risks providing a "misleading impression" of its total carbon footprint; 3) Peers such as Target and Walmart disclose emissions from all product sales, offering a benchmark for Amazon to meet; 4) Aligning with California and EU regulations, as well as preparing for future carbon pricing and border adjustment mechanisms, makes comprehensive disclosure a strategic necessity; 5) More complete reporting would reduce reputational risk, bolster Amazon's climate credibility, and enhance preparedness for evolving disclosure mandates. The resolution seeks a report disclosing all material Scope 3 emissions associated with Amazon's retail sales portfolio, beyond its current partial coverage.

Company's response: The board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that Amazon already provides robust and transparent carbon reporting, including Scope 3 emissions, in accordance with the Greenhouse Gas Protocol Corporate Standard. The company reports both absolute emissions and carbon intensity, and these are independently verified by third parties, with methodologies fully disclosed since 2019. Amazon argues that its current approach appropriately reflects emissions sources over which it has operational influence, including Amazon-branded product manufacturing and logistics, while excluding emissions from third-party manufacturing over which it lacks control. The board explains that including emissions from all products sold could result in widespread double-counting across companies and create misleading disclosures. Moreover, the GHG Protocol itself recognizes that full Scope 3 disclosure is not always feasible and should be guided by the principles of relevance, accuracy, and reliability. The company further references that both regulators like the SEC and institutional investors have flagged challenges with mandatory Scope 3 disclosures, particularly around data quality, comparability, and verification. Amazon asserts that its current focus is on deepening the accuracy of emissions data it can control and that it is actively engaging its highest-emitting suppliers to provide decarbonization plans, while also offering industry support through initiatives like the Amazon Sustainability Exchange. Given these ongoing efforts and the complexities inherent in broader Scope 3 reporting, the board concludes that the requested expansion would not provide useful or meaningful additional information for investors.

PIRC Recommendation: The current disclosure strategy leaves a critical blind spot by excluding 99% of its retail product sales from Scope 3 reporting. The argument that Scope 3 reporting could lead to double-counting is widely acknowledged in climate frameworks, yet it does not invalidate the importance of transparency and completeness. Moreover, the company's position appears increasingly misaligned with evolving regulatory frameworks in key jurisdictions and with best practice standards among peers. Disclosure of relevant, if not always fully auditable, Scope 3 categories is becoming a baseline investor expectation, especially for companies claiming leadership in sustainability. By resisting comprehensive reporting, Amazon risks falling behind its competitors and may expose itself to future regulatory and reputational shocks. The request for expanded emissions reporting is modest in scope, reasonable in expectation, and essential to provide investors with a more accurate view of climate risks embedded in Amazon's business model.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Additional Reporting on Impact of Data Centers on Climate Commitments

Proponent: Emily Cunningham

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that Amazon issue a report explaining how it will meet the climate change-related commitments it has made on greenhouse gas emissions, given the massively growing energy demand from artificial intelligence and data centers that Amazon is planning to build. The proponent expresses concern that Amazon's projected $150 billion investment in AI-driven data centers threatens its ability to meet its net-zero by 2040 and 100% renewable electricity goals. They argue that global data center power demand could double by 2030, and that Amazon's growth may drive fossil fuel expansion, particularly in regions like Virginia. They question Amazon's reliance on renewable energy credits, noting that growing demand could outpace supply and weaken the credibility of its climate claims. Given uncertainties around the timing of alternative energy sources like small modular reactors and shifting grid dynamics, the proponent requests a focused report explaining how Amazon will meet its climate goals while significantly increasing data center capacity.

Company's response: Amazon opposes the proposal, stating that it already provides detailed climate disclosures and is actively decoupling emissions from growth, having reduced carbon intensity by 13% in 2023 and achieved 100% renewable electricity matching ahead of schedule. The company highlights extensive efforts to improve energy efficiency, including custom AI chips, efficient cooling systems, and use of low-carbon materials. It also points to investments in nuclear energy, renewable diesel, and recycling infrastructure to reduce emissions. Amazon argues that its transparent, ongoing reporting and strong progress make the additional report unnecessary.

PIRC Recommendation: While Amazon's progress on emissions and renewables is commendable, the specific risks tied to AI-driven data center growth are not adequately addressed in current disclosures. Investors would benefit from clearer analysis on how future energy demand aligns with Amazon's climate targets, especially as fossil grid reliance increases and REC strategies face limitations. Given the centrality of AWS to Amazon's business and the scale of planned infrastructure, a dedicated report is reasonable and warranted. The proposal enhances climate transparency at a time of rapid infrastructure expansion and strengthens confidence in Amazon's net-zero strategy.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Assessment of Board Structure for Oversight of AI

Proponent: AFL-CIO Equity Index Funds, represented by Segal Marco Advisors

Proponent's argument: This proposal concerns the governance of artificial intelligence-related risks, specifically urging Amazon to commission an independent, third-party assessment of how its Board structure oversees human rights risks arising from AI development and deployment. The proponent calls on Amazon to evaluate its Board and committee structure with regard to overseeing human rights risks linked to AI, noting that Amazon plays a leading role in developing technologies that may cause or contribute to rights violations. Referencing global concerns raised by the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, the proposal warns that AI tools-ranging from facial recognition to autonomous systems-can fuel mass surveillance, discrimination, and abuse. The proponent points to a past case where Amazon reportedly abandoned a biased AI hiring tool and raises concern over its involvement in military contracts after other companies opted out. While recognizing Amazon's stated AI ethics commitments, the proposal argues that only an independent, third-party assessment can give shareholders meaningful transparency into whether governance structures are sufficient to mitigate human rights harms from AI, and calls on the Board to commission and publicly disclose such a report.

Company's response: Amazon recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it is already a leader in responsible AI development and governance. It outlines its comprehensive AI ethics framework, which includes eight dimensions such as privacy, fairness, explainability, and transparency, and highlights safeguards built into AI products like watermarking, safety filters, and model evaluations. The company emphasizes that it actively collaborates with regulators and industry on responsible AI, has received ISO/IEC 42001 certification, and has trained employees extensively in AI risks. It argues that Board and committee oversight is already robust, with multiple committees-such as the Nominating and Corporate Governance, Audit, and Leadership Development Committees-engaged in monitoring AI-related human rights and ethical risks. Directors possess relevant experience in AI, risk management, and human rights, and regularly review Amazon's AI practices. Amazon also notes that a similar shareholder proposal received less than 10% support the previous year, and contends this year's version is effectively the same in substance, making a third-party assessment duplicative and unnecessary.

PIRC Recommendation: While Amazon has clearly invested in responsible AI practices and governance, the sheer scale and sensitivity of AI deployment across surveillance, employment, and military contexts demands heightened scrutiny. The company's reliance on internal board structures and management updates, however comprehensive, lacks the independent verification that investors increasingly expect for systems with far-reaching ethical implications. An external assessment would provide a clear, unbiased view of how well current board structures align with the company's human rights commitments and whether additional governance tools are needed. This is especially important given Amazon's central role in cloud AI infrastructure and its high exposure to ethical, reputational, and regulatory risks. The low support for last year's proposal-which asked for a new board committee-is not equivalent to this request for a one-time assessment and report, which is modest, cost-conscious, and geared toward improving transparency.

9.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Packaging Materials

Proponent: As You Sow Foundation Fund, represented by As You Sow

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the Board issue a report, at reasonable expense and excluding proprietary information, describing how Amazon could address flexible plastic packaging in alignment with the findings of the Pew Report, or other authoritative sources, to reduce its contribution to plastic pollution. Shareholders argue the following: "Without immediate and sustained new commitments throughout the plastics value chain, annual flows of plastics into oceans could nearly triple by 2040. The growing plastic pollution crisis poses increasing risks to Amazon. Corporations could face an annual financial risk of approximately $100 billion should governments require them to cover the waste management costs of packaging they produce. Governments around the world are increasingly enacting such policies, including five new state laws that impose fees on corporations for single-use plastic (SUP) packaging. The European Union has banned ten SUP pollutants and taxed some non-recycled plastic packaging. Additionally, consumer demand for sustainable packaging is increasing. [...] Our Company could avoid regulatory, environmental, and competitive risks by adopting a comprehensive approach to addressing flexible plastic packaging use at scale.

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "We partner with industry peers and expert organizations, such as the Sustainable Packaging Coalition, to improve recycling infrastructure. We also work with The Recycling Partnership to help launch recycling programs in communities across the United States. In addition, we recognize that plastic packaging is an industry-wide challenge, and we are collaborating across the industry to help try to solve it. For example, together with Novamont, an Italy-based biomaterials company, we are testing new ways to collect and recycle bio-based and biodegradable materials, such as nongenetically modified corn starch and vegetable oils. [...] As evidenced by our existing initiatives, partnerships, investments, and progress, we are committed to reducing plastic pollution. We are conscientiously taking steps to address this and publicly sharing information regarding plastic in our outbound packaging and our progress to reduce plastic packaging and increase recyclability. We will continue to share our efforts and progress to our shareholders and the public. Accordingly, the Board recommends that shareholders vote against this proposal."

PIRC analysis: Reporting on sustainability issues is in shareholders' interests both as a means of informing shareholders of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, but also as a means of ensuring that the management and board of a company gives due consideration to these issues. The company indicates that it already has initiatives in this area. However, such reporting takes the form of estimates of measures such as percentage of packaging worldwide which was recyclable, compostable or biodegradable, or percentage of waste which was diverted from landfill. However, company's reporting seems to present no better information on how much actually is recycled, or what goals there are for achieving either 50% recycling or more. For this reason the report requested would appear to be necessary to assess where the Company has made mistakes and how it can remedy those. Support for the resolution is recommended.

10.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Warehouse Working Conditions

Proponent: Tulipshare Fund 1 LP, represented by Tulipshare Capital LLC.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the Board commission an independent audit and report of the working conditions and treatment that Amazon warehouse workers face, including the impact of its policies, management, performance metrics, and targets. Shareholders argue the following: "Investigative reports allege a mounting "injury crisis" at Amazon warehouses, with employees getting injured more frequently and severely than elsewhere in the industry. Workers are closely monitored, and state they must break safety rules to meet mandated work pace and quotas under threat of termination. Numerous state laws target Amazon's use of productivity quotas that can prevent workers from complying with safety guidelines or recovering from strenuous activity, leaving them at high risk of injury and illness. [...] Amazon's 2023 injury rate was "more than one and a half times that of TJX and almost triple that of Walmart, the two comparable US warehouse employers." Amazon's recently reported Occupational Safety and Health Administration data not only demonstrates workers experience a disproportionate share of industry-wide injuries, but also shows 95% of injuries reported require workers to take time-off for recovery or change job duties."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "As reinforced in our most recent safety reporting for 2024, our goal is to be the global benchmark for safety excellence across all industries in which we operate. The audit requested by this proposal would be duplicative because we have already publicly disclosed our workforce incident rates compared with industry data and we are already subject to extensive regulatory oversight and review. From 2019 to 2024, our worldwide recordable incident rate ("RIR") improved by 34% and our worldwide lost time incident rate ("LTIR") improved by 65%. From 2023 to 2024, our worldwide RIR improved by 6% and our worldwide LTIR improved by 13%. These performance metrics demonstrate that we have made meaningful and measurable progress since 2019, and we are committed to continuing these trends. The proposal continues to rely on false, misinformed, and misleading claims about our injury rates made by outside groups with ulterior motives. For example, the proposal cites a report issued by the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pension Committee, when previously chaired by Sen. Bernie Sanders. That report is wrong on the facts and features selective, outdated information that lacks context and is not grounded in reality. The main premise of the report as encapsulated in its title-"The 'Injury-Productivity Trade-off': How Amazon's Obsession with Speed Creates Uniquely Dangerous Warehouses"-is fundamentally flawed, since over the last five years we have increased our delivery speeds, while decreasing the injury rates across our network. Also, in contrast to what this proposal suggests, we do not require employees to meet specific, fixed productivity quotas."

PIRC Analysis

Ensuring fair and safe working conditions can improve employee morale and productivity. In addition, companies with strong labor practices enhance the company's reputation and brand value, as well as the power to attract talents and retain them in the long term. The company outlines the global strategy and commitment to support communities and employees, but it does not appear to clarify the proponents' issues or bring a case as to why such report would be counter-productive. The resolution is not unduly prescriptive and it is considered beneficial for management and shareholders to look at data from a local-global perspective, allowing to act on local potential flaws within the company's global strategy.

11.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Data Usage Oversight in AI Offerings

Proponent: National Legal and Policy Center.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request the Company prepare a report, at reasonable cost, omitting proprietary or legally privileged information, to be published within one year of the Annual Meeting and updated annually thereafter, which assesses the risks to the Company's operations and finances, and to public welfare, presented by the real or potential unethical or improper usage of external data in the development and training of its artificial intelligence offerings; what steps the Company takes to mitigate those risks; and how it measures the effectiveness of such efforts. Shareholders argue the following: "Amazon.com, Inc. ("Amazon" or the "Company") is an early leader in the AI arms race, which has helped push the Company to one of the highest market capitalizations in the world. [...] Prioritizing data ethics in Amazon's AI development will help avoid harmful fiduciary and regulatory consequences. Developers who prioritize ethical data usage will reap the benefits of consumer trust, while those that do not will suffer. Amazon's position in the AI arms race, and its associated historic valuation, hang in the balance."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "We are committed to, and are a leader in, the responsible development and use of artificial intelligence ("AI"). We adhere to industry best practices around data collection, and we design our products with the goal of respecting privacy rights. One of the core dimensions of our commitment to responsible AI is privacy and security, which means that data and models should be appropriately obtained, used, and protected. We believe collaboration among companies, governments, researchers, and the AI community is critical to foster the development of AI that is safe, responsible, and trustworthy. To that end, we have closely collaborated with efforts such as the G7 AI Hiroshima Process Code of Conduct and the AI Safety Summits in the UK and Seoul, and in May 2024, we joined the Frontier Model Forum to help advance AI safety. Our Board has the proper composition to effectively oversee risks associated with AI and, together with the Board committees, provides active, informed, and appropriate oversight of data usage and other risks associated with AI and machine learning, including technologies like foundation models and generative AI."

PIRC analysis: An explicit AI transparency report offers several key benefits as opposed to ad hoc agreements or policies. It builds trust with users and stakeholders by clarifying how AI is utilized in content creation and recommendation, including copyright infringements, and fostering confidence in fair and ethical practices. It helps identify and mitigate biases in the creation and dissemination of content, ensuring content recommendations are unbiased and inclusive. It addresses ethical concerns by enabling stakeholders to assess alignment with content policies and societal values. In addition to ensuring the company's regulatory compliance, an AI transparency report could educate users on responsible AI engagement, empowering them to interact with AI-generated content knowledgeably and ethically.

ZOETIS INC. AGM - 21-05-2025*4.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special MeetingsProponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to remove the current provision that considers the voice of certain Zoetis (ZTS) shareholders as non-shareholders. Currently all shares not held for one continuous year are considered non-shareholders if they seek to call for a special shareholder meeting on an important matter. Shareholders argue the following: ""The current one-year exclusion for all shares held for less than one continuous year makes the current so-called shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting useless. There is no point to have useless right on the books of ZTS. The reason to enable all shareholders to call for a special shareholder meeting is to allow one shareholder or a group of shareholders to quickly acquire ZTS shares to equal the challenging 25% share ownership requirement from all shares outstanding to call for a special shareholder meeting when there is an urgent matter to consider in order to incentivize a turnaround of ZTS. [...] The fact that one shareholder or a group of shareholders can quickly acquire more shares to call for a special shareholder meeting is an incentive for ZTS Directors to avoid such an emergency situation in the first place since the continued service of the worst performing ZTS Directors could be terminated by a special shareholder meeting. This is a good incentive for the ZTS Directors to have for the benefit of all shareholders.".

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Special meetings impose significant costs, both administratively and operationally. When a special meeting is called, our Board, management and colleagues must devote significant time and attention to preparing for it, which diverts time and attention away from their primary focus of overseeing and operating Zoetis' business. Therefore, special meetings should be reserved for extraordinary and time-sensitive issues that cannot be delayed until our next annual meeting and only when a substantial portion of shareholders with long-term interests agree that a special meeting must be called. Shareholders with short-term interests should not be entitled to cause such significant expense and distraction to advance their own particular interests, which may not be shared more broadly by shareholders. Eliminating the one-year holding period requirement, as requested by the proposal, would empower short-term investors to the detriment of the Board's and management's ability to protect the interests of our long-term shareholders. [...] Zoetis is committed to maintaining robust corporate governance practices and procedures, including shareholder engagement initiatives, to support our strategy while ensuring accountability and responsiveness to shareholders. Our Board regularly reviews our corporate governance structure, practices and procedures, taking into account market practices and trends and shareholder feedback, and is responsive to what is in the best interests of Zoetis and our shareholders. See "Key Governance Features" on page 23 for a summary of the best practices we have adopted to support our corporate governance."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The main difference between street name shares and non-street name shares lies in the way they are registered and held, whether under a nominee or directly in the investor's name. This however should not lead to differences in the ability to call for a shareholder meeting. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

4. Shareholder Resolution: Removal of the One-Year Stock Ownership Holding Period Required for Stockholders to Call a Special Meeting

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, calls for the removal of the current rule requiring stockholders to have held their shares for at least one continuous year in order to call a special meeting at United Airlines Holdings (UAL). He argues that this restriction renders the shareholder right to request special meetings ineffective, particularly in urgent situations where swift action is needed to incentivize a corporate turnaround. Citing long-term underperformance of UAL's stock price, he contends that both existing and potential shareholders may be discouraged from increasing their holdings if they are forced to wait a year before being able to initiate a special meeting. According to the proposal, enabling any shareholder or group of shareholders to rapidly acquire enough shares to meet the 25% threshold would serve as a check on the board's performance and encourage proactive governance. The proposal concludes by stressing that the current rule effectively silences shareholders who lack long-term holdings, thus undermining accountability and responsiveness in times of crisis.

Company's Response : The Board unanimously recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that the existing one-year holding requirement is a reasonable and balanced safeguard to ensure that only shareholders with a sustained, meaningful economic interest in the company can invoke the significant resources required to hold a special meeting. The Company warns that eliminating this rule could invite short-term investors with narrow agendas to disrupt operations and divert the Board's and management's focus away from long-term value creation. The Board emphasizes that special meetings demand substantial logistical and financial resources and should be reserved for extraordinary situations. It also points to the company's robust governance practices, including annual board elections, proxy access, and majority voting, as sufficient mechanisms for shareholder engagement. Further, the Company aligns its position with SEC guidance under Rule 14a-8, noting that the one-year holding period is consistent with federal regulations that require shareholders to demonstrate a lasting financial commitment before proposing initiatives that consume company resources. Therefore, the Board deems the proposal unnecessary and counterproductive to the interests of long-term shareholders.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. It is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

It is considered that a Lead Independent Director should be independent, in order to fulfil the responsibilities assigned to that role, irrespective of the level of independence of the Board. In terms of best practice, it is considered that both these committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members. At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Emission Reduction Targets

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow, on behalf of LongView LargeCap 500 Index Fund

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Old Dominion Freight Line to disclose how it plans to reduce Scope 1 and 2 greenhouse gas emissions in alignment with the goals of the Paris Agreement. The proponent emphasises that transportation accounts for 28% of U.S. emissions and that Old Dominion's fleet of over 10,000 vehicles is increasingly exposed to customer expectations and regulatory pressure. Despite a prior shareholder proposal on this topic receiving nearly 25% support, the company has yet to set any climate-aligned emission targets. The proposal notes that competitors such as FedEx, DHL, and Knight-Swift have already established such targets and offer climate-related services to clients. It highlights the accelerating pace of zero-emission vehicle development and suggests that setting targets now would help Old Dominion prepare for regulatory shifts, improve fleet planning, and demonstrate climate leadership. The resolution also suggests the company provide a timeline and strategy for target-setting, including anticipated costs and emissions reductions, to better align with market and policy expectations in a decarbonising economy.

Company's Response: The Board opposes the proposal, arguing that current technological and infrastructure limitations prevent the company from responsibly committing to Paris-aligned emissions targets. Old Dominion emphasises its industry-leading fuel efficiency and sustainability efforts, including a modernised fleet with an average tractor age of 4.3 years, a 6.7% improvement in emissions per ton-mile since 2020, and increased use of biodiesel and other low-carbon fuels. The company notes its investments in operational efficiency, including route optimization, driver training, and aerodynamic enhancements, as well as testing zero-emission vehicles and electric yard equipment. However, it states that Class 8 zero-emission tractors do not yet offer the operational range or cost feasibility necessary for widespread deployment, and that associated infrastructure is not sufficiently developed. The Board further explains that prematurely adopting emission targets could lead to higher operating costs, reduced service quality, and capital inefficiencies. Oversight of climate-related risks is integrated through a cross-functional ESG governance structure involving executive leadership and the Board's Risk Committee. While committed to sustainability, the company concludes that setting Paris-aligned emissions targets is not feasible or prudent under current conditions.

PIRC analysis: Most investors acknowledge the IPCC's conclusion that emissions must be halved by 2030 and reach net zero by 2050 to limit global warming to 1.5°C. Integrating these goals into business planning is considered essential for long-term value preservation. This proposal seeks greater clarity on how Old Dominion intends to reduce its Scope 1 and 2 emissions, in line with the Paris Agreement. While the company outlines operational efficiencies and investments in cleaner technologies, it has not committed to formal, science-aligned targets. Comprehensive disclosure of transition plans and interim milestones would assist shareholders in assessing how climate-related risks and opportunities are being managed. This is especially relevant for sectors with direct exposure to regulatory developments and technological shifts, such as transportation. Enhanced reporting would also support investor evaluation of potential impacts under different climate scenarios, including a 1.5°C trajectory.

THE HARTFORD FINANCIAL SERVICES GROUP INC AGM - 21-05-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges the Board of Directors to amend Hartford's governing documents to grant shareholders owning at least 10% of outstanding common stock the ability to call a special shareholder meeting. This right is positioned as a critical tool to ensure meaningful shareholder engagement and a mechanism to hold the Board accountable, particularly when pressing concerns arise that warrant urgent strategic shifts. The proposal underscores that granting shareholders this ability would enhance responsiveness and deter Board complacency. It argues that in light of increasing adoption of director exculpation clauses, which reduce liability for breaches of fiduciary duty, a low-threshold special meeting right offers a practical means to improve director performance. The proponent contests the adequacy of current communication channels with management, asserting that they are often ineffective. Additionally, with the growing use of online meetings, the cost and complexity of special meetings have diminished, reinforcing the need to update the Company's bylaws to reflect contemporary shareholder engagement capabilities. The proposal concludes that enabling this right serves shareholders' long-term interests and strengthens governance.

Company's Response: The Board recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, asserting that it is unnecessary and not in the Company's best interests. In February 2025, the Company amended its bylaws to allow shareholders owning at least 25% of outstanding stock to call a special meeting. The Board believes this threshold balances shareholder rights with the need to prevent disruption and resource diversion that could occur from special meetings called by small shareholder groups with narrow interests. It emphasizes that a 25% threshold aligns with S&P 500 market practices and feedback from institutional investors, which supported a special meeting right but with safeguards against misuse. The Company maintains that its existing governance framework already enables shareholders to communicate concerns effectively. These include direct outreach campaigns, access to non-management directors, and the use of third-party reporting channels. Additionally, special meetings may be called by a Board majority or its Chairman when needed. The Board concludes that the existing threshold supports meaningful shareholder participation while protecting long-term shareholder value, and thus, it opposes the lower 10% threshold proposed.

11. Authorisation to acquire own shares - incentive plan and executive compensation

The Board of Directors proposes that the Annual General Meeting authorises the Board of Directors to buy back up to 10,000,000 company shares (approximately 0.7% of the company's share capital) in the market in order to fulfil the company's obligations to employees who participate in the group's share plans: the company's general share purchase plan for employees (ESP), the long-term share incentive plan for executive management (LTI), and the executive compensation element: salary substitute as restricted shares for certain executives.

This is considered a technical resolution for the implementation of plans approved at previous AGMs, which companies have a legal duty to fund.

ALIGN TECHNOLOGY INC AGM - 21-05-2025

1d.. Elect Joseph Lacob - Non-Executive Director

Non-Executive Director and Chair of the Nominating and Governance Committee. Not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. In terms of best practice, it is considered that the Nominating and Governance Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the chair of nomination committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure.

The Chair of the Nominating and Governance Committee is considered to be accountable for the Company's sustainability programme, and there are concerns over the Company's sustainability policies and practice.

Proponent: John Chevedden.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders ask the Board of Directors to take the steps necessary to amend the appropriate company governing documents to give the owners of a combined 10% of our outstanding common stock the power to call a special shareholder meeting or the owners of the lowest percentage of shareholders, as governed by state law, the power to call a special shareholder meeting. Shareholders argue the following: "A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting, as called for in this proposal, can help make shareholder engagement meaningful. A shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting will help ensure that the Align Technology Board and management engages with shareholders in good faith because shareholders will have a viable Plan B by calling for a special shareholder meeting. To guard against the Align Technology Board of Directors becoming complacent shareholders need the ability to call a special shareholder meeting to help the Board adopt new strategies when the need arises. This proposal topic is now more important than ever because there has been a mad rush of Board exculpation proposals to limit the financial liability of directors when they violate their fiduciary duty. This is a disincentive for improved director performance. Since a special shareholder meeting can be called to replace a director, adoption of this proposal could foster better performance by our directors. Companies often claim that shareholders have multiple means to communicate with management but in most cases these means are as effective as mailing a letter to the CEO".

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "We believe that giving stockholders holding 25% of our outstanding common stock the right to call a special meeting of stockholders strikes the appropriate balance between stockholder rights and protecting the long-term interests of Align and its stockholders. Special meetings should only be called to discuss critical, time-sensitive issues that cannot wait until our next annual meeting of stockholders and only in cases where a substantial portion of stockholders agree that a special meeting must be called. A failure to receive the support of 25% of stockholders to convene a special meeting is a strong indicator that the issue is unduly narrow and not deemed critical by our stockholders generally. [...] Align provides multiple channels for stockholders to raise matters, including the right to nominate directors through proxy access, the ability to submit stockholder proposals, regular engagement with stockholders, and the ability to communicate directly with any of our directors individually, any committee of the Board, the independent directors as a group, the Chairman of the Board, and the Board generally. Align's ongoing engagement with stockholders is an open and constructive forum for stockholders to express concerns, allows Align to understand the priorities and perspectives of its stockholders, and enables Align to effectively address the issues that matter most to its stockholders. Through these engagements, the Company receives input, provides additional information, and addresses questions on Align's corporate strategy, executive compensation programs, corporate governance, and other topics of interest to stockholders."

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Special Shareholder Meeting Improvement

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, urges the Board of Thermo Fisher Scientific to eliminate the current by-law provision requiring shareholders to hold their shares for a continuous one-year period before being eligible to call a special shareholder meeting. He contends that this holding requirement renders the shareholder right effectively meaningless, as it disables timely collective action during periods of company underperformance. Chevedden highlights that Thermo Fisher stock has declined from its peak of $554 in 2021 to $535 in late 2024, a signal of a potential slump that warrants rapid response mechanisms. He argues that allowing shareholders or newly acquiring shareholder groups to reach the 15% ownership threshold without waiting a full year would incentivise both share acquisition and accountability from the Board, potentially leading to strategic turnarounds. The proposal emphasises that innovative solutions often arise from new or external shareholders rather than existing ones and that quick access to shareholder meeting rights strengthens governance and responsiveness. He concludes that the current system significantly limits shareholders' ability to act in times of urgent concern and calls for immediate reform to remove the restriction.

Company's Response: The Board opposes the proposal, asserting that the one-year holding period to call a special shareholder meeting is a critical safeguard against exploitation by short-term shareholders with narrow interests. It argues that the existing threshold 15% ownership held for one continuous year strikes a balance between enabling shareholder participation and preventing misuse of corporate resources. The Board supports its position by referencing SEC Rule 14a-8, which also requires a one-year holding period for proposal submission, reinforcing that a meaningful investment stake is essential for such rights. The Company emphasises that convening a special meeting involves considerable financial and administrative burdens, diverting Board and management attention from business operations and long-term shareholder value. Removing the holding requirement, the Board contends, could lead to frequent disruptions by special interest groups. Additionally, the Company underscores its commitment to strong governance and shareholder engagement, highlighting existing mechanisms such as proxy access, majority voting for directors, declassified board structure, annual say-on-pay votes, and open communication channels with directors. Thus, the Board maintains that the current policy is both fair and protective of all shareholders' long-term interests.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 15% threshold adopted by the company, which is welcomed. However it is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Assessment of the Company's Supplier & Partner Code of Conduct Due Diligence Process

Proponent: The AFL-CIO Equity Index Funds

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls for Mondelēz International to commission an independent third-party assessment and report evaluating the effectiveness of its due diligence processes under its Supplier & Partner Code of Conduct, with a particular focus on the respect for freedom of association and collective bargaining rights. The underlying concern is that the company's current frameworks may not adequately identify, monitor, or remediate human rights violations-particularly within its supply chain-and that greater transparency and independent verification would help reinforce Mondelēz's stated commitments. The proposal likely follows concerns raised by past incidents (e.g. involving supplier Hearthside) and broader investor interest in ensuring credible implementation of human rights policies.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that Mondelēz already has strong and comprehensive mechanisms in place to uphold and monitor human rights, including freedom of association and collective bargaining, both internally and across its supply chain. These commitments are codified in the company's Human Rights Policy, Code of Conduct, and its Supplier & Partner Code of Conduct ("Supplier Code"), which is embedded in all supplier contracts. The Company highlights several key elements of its program: 1) Risk-based due diligence prior to onboarding new suppliers; 2) Embedding of contractual obligations tied to responsible sourcing; 3) Ongoing audits of prioritized tier 1 suppliers, with approximately 90% completing SMETA audits in the last three years; 4) Remediation processes and right to terminate non-compliant suppliers; 5) Collaboration initiatives such as the industry coalition targeting child and forced labor prevention; and 6) Responsive actions to supplier issues, including the case with Hearthside, demonstrating the application of oversight mechanisms. Mondelēz argues that commissioning an additional third-party assessment would not meaningfully enhance existing procedures and would divert resources from more impactful efforts.

PIRC analysis: The proponent asks for a report on the risks associated with potential and actual human rights risks of its operations and supply chain. Such risks can have significant reputational and financial consequences for a company and it is in the best interests of shareholders to be informed of the Company's exposure to and management of such risks. While the company indicates that it is committed to not using forced labour in its supply chains, it does not disclose the risks to which the company might be exposed regarding additional violations of human rights. Ensuring that suppliers are not violating human rights is considered to be due diligence, in order to uphold company's policies on human rights and minimize corresponding risks. As such, a vote for the resolution is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Flexible Plastic Packaging

Proponent: As You Sow.

Proponent's argument: The resolution urges Mondelēz to issue a report evaluating how it could address its use of flexible plastic packaging, aligned with findings from the Pew Charitable Trusts' "Breaking the Plastic Wave" report or similar sources. The proponents highlight the significant environmental, financial, and reputational risks associated with continued reliance on flexible plastic packaging, which is often unrecyclable and heavily used by the company (70.1% of total packaging). They cite rising regulatory pressures globally-including laws in the EU, France, Portugal, and five U.S. states-as well as increasing consumer demand for sustainable alternatives. The Pew Report identifies flexible plastic as the greatest opportunity for reduction or elimination, with recycling alone deemed insufficient to address pollution. The proponents argue that Mondelēz's reliance on flexible plastics puts it at risk of failing its 2025 sustainable packaging goals, as only 18.9% of its packaging is recyclable in practice and at scale, and none is reusable. The report requested should evaluate risks, assess pathways to recyclable or reusable packaging, and consider opportunities for collaboration on pre-competitive innovation.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that Mondelēz already addresses the concerns raised through comprehensive and transparent initiatives. It states that the company annually discloses its sustainable packaging progress in the "Snacking Made Right Report" and has set measurable goals to reduce virgin plastic use and increase recyclability, with 96% of packaging designed to be recyclable by the end of 2023. Mondelēz pursues a three-pronged approach-reduce, evolve, and improve systems-including efforts to scale alternative materials and invest in circular solutions. It collaborates through industry alliances (e.g. Circular Action Alliance, Consumer Goods Forum Flexibles Taskforce) and supports Extended Producer Responsibility schemes. Investments in ventures like Circulate Capital, Pack2Earth, and Outlander Materials further demonstrate its commitment to innovation in flexible packaging alternatives. The company maintains that issuing an additional report would be duplicative, unproductive, and provide limited added value to shareholders.

PIRC analysis: Reporting on sustainability issues is in shareholders' interests both as a means of informing shareholders of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, but also as a means of ensuring that the management and board of a company gives due consideration to these issues. The company indicates that it already has initiatives in this area. However, such reporting takes the form of estimates of measures such as percentage of packaging worldwide which was recyclable, compostable or biodegradable, or percentage of waste which was diverted from landfill. However, company's reporting seems to present no better information on how much actually is recycled, or what goals there are for achieving either 50% recycling or more. For this reason the report requested would appear to be necessary to assess where the Company has made mistakes and how it can remedy those. Support for the resolution is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Climate Lobbying

Proponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests Mondelēz to issue an annually updated report assessing whether and how its direct and indirect lobbying efforts align with its publicly stated goal of achieving net zero greenhouse gas emissions by 2050. The proponent argues that although the company has recognized the risks posed by climate change and adopted science-based targets, it does not provide sufficient transparency around its lobbying activities. Mondelēz has spent approximately $9 million on federal lobbying since 2014, with minimal disclosure regarding state-level activity or the alignment of its advocacy with climate goals. The proponent highlights the risk that misaligned lobbying can undermine corporate climate commitments, damage brand reputation, and expose companies to financial and operational risks. The proposal cites Unilever as an example of more comprehensive disclosure and recommends Mondelēz consider the Global Standard on Responsible Climate Lobbying to guide its reporting. It specifically calls attention to the company's association with at least one trade group known to oppose climate policy measures, raising concerns about indirect lobbying inconsistency.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that Mondelēz already provides substantial disclosure and has strong internal oversight mechanisms in place. The company states that it publishes comprehensive annual disclosures on lobbying activities, trade association memberships with dues over $50,000, and political contributions. Mondelēz claims a high level of transparency, pointing to its top-tier ranking on the CPA-Zicklin Index in 2024. It acknowledges that it may not always align with all trade association positions but asserts that its dues are not used to support or oppose political candidates. The company outlines its climate progress, including a 3.7% reduction in end-to-end emissions in 2023, increased use of renewable electricity, and approval of its 2030 and 2050 net-zero targets by the SBTi. It argues that current governance, including Board-level oversight through the Governance, Membership and Sustainability

Committee, ensures consistency between its lobbying and sustainability strategies. The company views the requested report as duplicative and unnecessary given its existing frameworks and disclosures.

PIRC analysis: The transparency and completeness of the Company's reporting on lobbying expenditures related to climate is considered insufficient. The proposal is advisory and is considered adequately worded to respect the prerogatives of the board. It is considered that the proposal does not mean to undermine the past work of the company in this respect, or the positive role of these associations in some aspects. Steps forward are encouraging, and the company has demonstrated ability to monitor and act, when the work of some associations have come into conflict with the company's support of the Paris Agreement. Although company's contributions to trade associations do not necessarily equate with that association's political or lobbying activities, it is considered to be to the benefit of the Company and its shareholders to be open about those activities, especially if they are antithetical to its published statements about climate risk and how it is attempting to manage this. In this sense, a vote in favour is recommended as a way to show shareholders' support for the board efforts to oversee and manage its relationships with industry associations, whose positioning may not align with either the position adopted by the company or the interests of long-term investors.

8.. Shareholder Proposal: Report Assessing Effectiveness of Implementation of Human Rights Policy

Proponent: Wespeth Funds Trust

Proponent's argument: The resolution requests that Mondelēz commission an independent third-party report assessing the effectiveness of its implementation of the Human Rights Policy (HRP) in conflict-affected and high-risk areas (CAHRAs), with particular focus on Russia and Ukraine. The proponent argues that such areas demand heightened human rights due diligence (HRDD) under the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (UNGPs), given their elevated legal and operational risks. Mondelēz's continued operations in Russia, despite international sanctions and accusations of war crimes against the Russian government, expose the company to reputational and ethical concerns. The Ukrainian government has officially labelled Mondelēz an "international sponsor of war", and the company's operations have drawn criticism from customers, employees, and civil society. The proponent highlights the company's increasing revenues from Russia and its reportedly ongoing operational and managerial ties there, despite public claims of a self-sufficient subsidiary. Mondelēz is also exposed to other CAHRAs, including Brazil, Côte d'Ivoire, and Guatemala. The proposal seeks a third-party analysis of the HRP's practical effectiveness, including the identification of potential policy or governance gaps to improve human rights risk management in these areas.

Company's response: The Board opposes the proposal, asserting that Mondelēz already provides robust disclosures and third-party assessments related to human rights, including in CAHRAs. The company references its annual Human Rights Due Diligence (HRDD) & Modern Slavery Report, developed with input from third-party experts (e.g. twentyfifty), as well as human rights training and grievance mechanisms accessible in local languages. It highlights heightened HRDD practices specifically in Russia and Ukraine, including social audits at manufacturing sites and actions taken to mitigate risk. One Ukrainian site underwent a virtual SMETA audit in 2024 due to security risks, while one of three Russian facilities has been audited, with the others scheduled for 2025. The company has introduced internal "Human Rights Business Unit Check-ins" in high-risk regions to bolster local capability. Mondelēz maintains that its Russian business has been scaled down, with no new capital investments or advertising, a 30% drop in contribution to global revenue since 2022, and ongoing humanitarian aid initiatives in Ukraine. The Board argues that the requested report would duplicate existing reporting and not add meaningful insight for shareholders.

PIRC Recommendation: The company's reporting lacks independent assessment of the effectiveness of its HRP implementation in such contexts, particularly regarding decision-making around continued operations. Furthermore, reliance on internal check-ins or selected audits, some of which are deferred, cannot substitute for a dedicated, independent evaluation with a focus on governance and risk mitigation. As regulatory and investor expectations around human rights due diligence grow, particularly under EU legislation, enhanced transparency and independent review are warranted. This resolution is proportionate, non-prescriptive, and aimed at addressing a clearly material risk. A third-party assessment would strengthen shareholder confidence in Mondelēz's ability to meet its responsibilities under the UNGPs.

9.. Shareholder Resolution: Recycled Content Claims

Proponent: Jan Dell

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Mondelēz issue a report by December 2025 detailing the factual basis for the legitimacy of its recycled content claims on plastic packaging. The proponent raises concerns about the use of mass balance accounting and circular certificates-particularly the ISCC system used to claim up to 50% recycled content in Triscuit packaging-arguing that these methods are misleading and legally questionable. Citing positions from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the California Attorney General, the proposal highlights that such practices are not considered valid indicators of recycled content, and may be legally deceptive under state law. The pyrolysis process used in advanced recycling produces minimal new plastic, primarily yielding fuel, thereby challenging the accuracy of recycled content claims derived from such methods. The proponent also notes the financial risk of investing in certificates that may not withstand regulatory scrutiny, suggesting potential reputational, operational, and legal exposure. The proposal recommends the report be conducted by independent experts with no ties to the plastics or recycling industry.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that Mondelēz already has rigorous review and substantiation processes in place for all on-pack claims, including those related to recycled content. The company states that claims are vetted through legal, corporate affairs, and regulatory teams to ensure compliance with applicable laws, and that internal training and resources are regularly updated. It emphasizes its commitment to improving packaging circularity through advanced recycling investments and partnerships, such as its collaboration with Amcor and investment in Licella, a firm focused on turning end-of-life plastics into feedstock for new packaging. Mondelēz argues that advanced recycling technologies are increasingly accepted and aligned with evolving regulatory standards and that its participation in global and industry-led initiatives-like the Ellen MacArthur Foundation's Global Commitment and the Circular Action Alliance-demonstrates its serious commitment to credible circular solutions. It maintains that its packaging strategy, certification usage, and on-pack labelling already meet legal and ethical standards, rendering the proposed report unnecessary and duplicative.

PIRC analysis: Reporting on sustainability issues is in shareholders' interests both as a means of informing shareholders of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, but also as a means of ensuring that the management and board of a company gives due consideration to these issues. The company indicates that it already has initiatives in this area. However, such reporting takes the form of estimates of measures such as percentage of packaging worldwide which was recyclable, compostable or biodegradable, or percentage of waste which was diverted from landfill. However, company's reporting seems to present no better information on how much actually is recycled, or what goals there are for achieving either 50% recycling or more. For this reason the report requested would appear to be necessary to assess where the Company has made mistakes and how it can remedy those. Support for the resolution is recommended.

29. Shareholder Resolution: Amendments to Resolution 24

Proponent Shareholder: Fonds Commun de Placement d'Entreprise Orange Actions

Proponent's argument: The supervisory board of the Orange Actions employee investment fund expresses the view that all Orange Group employees should benefit from free share allocations with the same regularity as executive corporate officers and senior managers. The objective is twofold: to increase employee ownership in Orange and to strengthen social cohesion within the Group. The proposal seeks to amend Resolution 24 to ensure that any free share allocation to executives is accompanied by a similar operation for all other employees. This could take the form of either a free share grant to all Group employees, with the option to contribute those shares to a company investment fund, or a reserved share offer supported by an attractive matching contribution, encouraging broader and recurring employee ownership. The proposal is intended to promote inclusiveness and parity in access to equity incentives across the organisation.

Company's Response : The Board of Directors of Orange did not approve the resolution proposed by the Orange Actions employee investment fund and has recommended that shareholders vote against it or abstain.

PIRC Recommendation: The proposal supports equitable treatment in long-term incentive practices and promotes inclusive employee ownership. Ensuring that non-executive employees benefit from the same opportunities as top executives enhances fairness, alignment of interests, and social cohesion. Support is recommended.

30. Shareholder Resolution: Terms of Office for Chairman

Proponent Shareholder: Fonds Commun de Placement d'Entreprise Orange Actions

Proponent's argument: The supervisory board of the Orange Actions employee investment fund has proposed an amendment to Article 14 of Orange's Articles of Association to introduce a limit on the number of board mandates that the Chairman of the Board of Directors may hold simultaneously. Specifically, the resolution would restrict the Chairman to no more than two additional mandates as a director or supervisory board member of other companies listed on regulated markets. The fund argues that this measure is necessary to ensure that the Chairman can devote sufficient time and attention to their responsibilities at Orange and to avoid conflicts of interest or overboarding, which could negatively impact governance quality and oversight.

Company's Response : The Board of Directors of Orange did not approve this shareholder resolution and has recommended that shareholders vote against it or abstain.

PIRC Recommendation: PIRC recommends a vote in favour. The proposed restriction addresses a core governance concern - overboarding, which can compromise board effectiveness and accountability. By limiting the Chairman's external commitments, the resolution aims to ensure that the individual can dedicate adequate focus to Orange's strategic direction and oversight responsibilities.

DIAMONDBACK ENERGY INC AGM - 21-05-2025

4. Shareholder Resolution: Executive Severance Arrangements

Proponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument Shareholders request that the Board seek shareholder approval of any senior manager's new or renewed pay package that provides for severance or termination payments with an estimated value exceeding 2.99 times the sum of the executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal only applies to the Named Executive Officers. Shareholders argue the following: "Severance or termination payments include cash, equity or other pay that is paid out or vests due to a senior executive's termination for any reason. Payments include those provided under employment agreements, severance plans, and change-in-control clauses in long-term equity plans, but not life insurance, pension benefits, or deferred compensation earned and vested prior to termination. "Estimated total value" includes: lump-sum payments; payments offsetting tax liabilities, perquisites or benefits not vested under a plan generally available to management employees, post-employment consulting fees or office expense and equity awards if vesting is accelerated, or a performance condition waived, due to termination. The Board shall retain the option to seek shareholder approval after material terms are agreed upon. This proposal is relevant even if there are current golden parachute limits. A limit on golden parachutes is like a speed limit. A speed limit by itself does not guarantee that the speed limit will never be exceeded. Like this proposal the rules associated with a speed limit provide consequences if the limit is exceeded. With this proposal the consequences are a non-binding shareholder vote is required for unreasonably rich golden parachutes."

Company's response The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "'Diamondback's compensation practices are designed by our compensation committee, which is composed entirely of independent directors and advised by an independent compensation consultant, to reward sustained performance and maximize shareholder value. This includes, at pivotal moments for the company, promoting stability and continuity and ensuring smooth leadership transitions. Equity compensation is an integral part of Diamondback's executive compensation framework, aligning stockholder and executive interests, promoting accountability, and incentivizing long-term performance. [...] We compete for talent with other large companies both within and outside of our industry. Diamondback relies on a competitive compensation framework, including equity awards and severance arrangements, to incentivize, recruit and retain highly qualified executives who are essential to Diamondback's long-term success and value creation for stockholders. These benefits are critical for maintaining a competitive edge in attracting and retaining talent and preserving stockholders' long-term interests. [...] For all the above reasons, the board believes that this proposal is not in the best interests of our stockholders and that Diamondback's current compensation and severance policies and practices, particularly the Severance Plan, implemented by the Company consistent with market practices and discussed in more detail in this proxy statement beginning on page 59, are appropriate and effective at aligning the interests of our executive officers with those of our stockholders. The Stockholder Proposal could undermine the objectives of our programs and is not in the best interests of our stockholders."

PIRC analysis: Change-in-control clauses are seen as anti-takeover measures which can be used to entrench under-performing management in the event of a hostile takeover and the company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact, ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). On the contrary, this proposal is considered to be an advance in corporate governance, as it will allow to reduce the gap between shareowners and management.

Though the deferral component is welcomed, it should be noted that it is considered that 50% of the annual bonus should be deferred for over two years. Malus and clawback provisions apply. NORTHROP GRUMMAN CORPORATION AGM - 21-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Support Improved Clawback Policy regarding Unearned Executive Pay

Proponent: Mr. John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Northrop Grumman amend its current clawback policy to strengthen accountability for executive compensation. Specifically, the proposal asks the Board to broaden the policy's scope so that it applies to all Named Executive Officers (NEOs) and includes not just misconduct, but also conduct or negligence as grounds for mandatory recoupment. Furthermore, it calls for the Board to report annually in the proxy statement on any deliberations regarding whether or not to enforce the policy, including explanations when recoupment is not pursued. The current policy, the proponent argues, is incomplete and insufficiently transparent. Citing the Wells Fargo scandal as a cautionary tale, where executive negligence was not punished through clawback measures, the proponent warns that Northrop Grumman executives could likewise be rewarded despite negligent conduct. The proponent positions this reform as a step toward improving ethical standards and aligning executive incentives with shareholder interests.

Company's response: The Board opposes the proposal, arguing that the current Company Recoupment Policy is already comprehensive and meets or exceeds regulatory requirements under NYSE and SEC rules. The policy includes a "no-fault" clause that allows for clawback in the event of accounting restatements due to material noncompliance, regardless of executive culpability. Furthermore, the policy enables the Board to seek recovery from all elected officers-not only NEOs-for certain misconduct, including fraud, bribery, illegal acts, or gross negligence related to supervision and reporting obligations. The policy also allows for the CEO to recover incentive payments from non-executive employees in specific instances. The Board criticises the proposal's inclusion of "conduct or negligence" as overly broad and ill-defined, warning that it could lead to unintended consequences, such as discouraging appropriate risk-taking and impairing executive decision-making. It further argues that mandating recoupment under such vague terms could reduce the company's ability to attract and retain top talent. The company states that it already discloses clawback amounts under appropriate circumstances and views further reporting obligations as redundant. Overall, the Board concludes that its existing policy effectively promotes accountability and that the proposed changes would introduce unnecessary complexity and potential harm.

PIRC analysis: While the proposal would require recoupment of remuneration under slightly broader circumstances than are typically included in the most common claw-back policies, the fact that the company does not have any claw-back provisions - policies that have been widely adopted despite the SEC's failure to promulgate any final rulemaking on the issue - is of sufficient concern that support for the proposal be recommended. The proposal will be an advance in corporate governance. On this basis, support for the proposal is recommended.

On balance, opposition is recommended.

Proponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the board of directors take the steps necessary to enable 10% of shares to request a record date to initiate written consent. Shareholders argue the following: "Currently it takes the formal backing 30% of all shares that normally cast ballots (25% of shares outstanding) at the annual meeting to do so little ask for a record date for written consent. Requiring the formal backing 30% of shares to do so little ask for a record date cuts shareholders off at the knees. And then any proposed written consent would still need 60% approval from the shares that usually vote at the Equinix annual meeting. This 60% vote requirement gives overwhelming supermajority protection to management resistance to modernization during the current rapidly changing business environment. Enabling 10% of shares to apply for a record date for written consent is reasonable because scores of companies do not even require 01% of stock ownership to do so little as request a record date."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "Equinix already provides stockholders with the ability to act by written consent. A stockholder (or group of stockholders) must own 25% of our common stock to request that the Board establish a record date to initiate written consent. The stockholder proposal seeks to change the ownership threshold to 10%. [...] Our Board continually reassesses our corporate governance practices to identify areas in which the company can help provide greater transparency and accountability for the benefit of our stockholders. After balancing these important yet competing interests, the Board believes the current 25% ownership requirement provides stockholders with an important right while at the same time protecting stockholders from potential abuse and significant costs for Equinix if the ownership threshold were set at 10% as proposed in this stockholder proposal."

PIRC analysis: The company has strong special meeting rights, such as the ability of shareholders to call one with 10% of shareholders. Nevertheless, there are emergency situations where convening a special meeting might take too long or be too difficult, and written consents may be gathered more quickly. Regardless of the percentage required to call special meetings, written consent rights are very important. A vote for the resolution is recommended.

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the board take each step necessary so that each voting requirement in our charter and bylaws (that is explicit or implicit due to default to state law) that calls for a greater than simple majority vote be replaced by a requirement for a majority of the votes cast for and against applicable proposals, or a simple majority in compliance with applicable laws. If necessary this means the closest standard to a majority of the votes cast for and against such proposals consistent with applicable laws. Shareholders argue the following: "Shareholders are willing to pay a premium for shares of companies that have excellent corporate governance. EPAM Systems' supermajority voting requirements have been found to be one of 6 entrenching mechanisms that are negatively related to company performance according to "What Matters in Corporate Governance" by Lucien Bebchuk, Alma Cohen and Allen Farrell of the Harvard Law School. Supermajority requirements can be used to block proposals supported by most shareholder by opposed by the Board of Directors."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "The Board cannot unilaterally remove the supermajority voting requirement from our Certificate of Incorporation as the DGCL requires stockholders' approval. For this reason, the Board has approved and recommended that stockholders approve the amendment to our Certificate of Incorporation to eliminate the supermajority voting requirement, as described in Proposal

6. In addition, in Proposal 7, the Board has approved and recommended that stockholders adopt an amendment to our Certificate of Incorporation to "opt out" of Section 203 of the DGCL which requires a supermajority vote for certain stockholders to engage in a business combination with a company for a period of three years after buying more than 15% of the company's stock. If stockholders approve these two Company proposals, all supermajority voting requirements in our governing documents will be eliminated. We believe that the Company's Proposals 6 and 7 and their accompanying amendment to the Certificate of Incorporation to change the supermajority to majority of outstanding shares is consistent with market practice for simple majority voting in governing documents and will have the effect of removing all supermajority voting standards upon stockholder approval of the Company's proposals."

PIRC analysis: It is considered to be best practice that shareholders should have the right to approve most matters submitted for their consideration by a simple majority of the shares voted. There are concerns that the supermajority provisions which relate to the company's corporate governance documents could frustrate attempts by the majority of shareholders to make the company more accountable or strengthen the independence of the Board. Support is therefore recommended.

VERIZON COMMUNICATIONS INC AGM - 22-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Climate lobbying alignment

Proponent Shareholder: Trillium ESG Global Equity Fund

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Verizon to improve transparency around its lobbying efforts related to climate policy. Verizon has acknowledged the risks climate change poses to its infrastructure and business operations, citing past events like hurricanes that disrupted service. Despite recognizing climate change as a material risk and setting decarbonization targets-53% reduction in operational emissions by 2030 and 40% value chain emissions by 2035-the company has not provided adequate disclosures regarding how its lobbying efforts align with these climate goals. The proposal expresses concern that Verizon's membership in industry groups like the National Association of Manufacturers and Business Roundtable may undercut its climate commitments. It argues that the company risks reputational damage and contributes to systemic climate risk by supporting organizations that oppose critical climate legislation. The proposal highlights the importance of comprehensive lobbying alignment disclosures and suggests that Verizon follow best practices as set by companies like Unilever and Enel. It calls for an annual report analyzing whether and how Verizon's direct and indirect lobbying aligns with its climate goals, including the criteria and process used. This would help assure investors that Verizon's advocacy supports, rather than undermines, its long-term decarbonization strategy. Company's response: Verizon recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it already demonstrates strong governance, transparency, and alignment in its political engagement. It cites its top-tier "Trendsetter" ranking in the CPA-Zicklin Index and its robust oversight structures, including the Corporate Governance and Policy Committee's annual reviews. Verizon argues that the requested report would duplicate existing disclosures without adding value to shareholders. The company emphasizes that its Political Engagement Report already outlines its policy priorities-such as 5G leadership, broadband access, and spectrum licensing-and lists affiliations with trade associations. While acknowledging that it may not always agree with every stance taken by these groups, Verizon notes that it maintains communication to address disagreements and regularly reassesses its participation. The company outlines its climate-related efforts, including membership in clean energy alliances and publication of a TCFD Report. Verizon maintains that its lobbying is guided by its core business and sustainability strategies and monitored via rigorous governance. It concludes that the proposed report would not materially advance shareholder interests and that current disclosures suffice for transparency and accountability.

PIRC analysis: The transparency and completeness of the Company's reporting on lobbying expenditures related to climate is considered insufficient. The proposal is advisory and is considered adequately worded to respect the prerogatives of the board. It is considered that the proposal does not mean to undermine the past work of the company in this respect, or the positive role of these associations in some aspects. Steps forward are encouraging, and the company has demonstrated ability to monitor and act, when the work of some associations have come into conflict with the company's support of the Paris Agreement. Although company's contributions to trade associations do not necessarily equate with that association's political or lobbying activities, it is considered to be to the benefit of the Company and its shareholders to be open about those activities, especially if they are antithetical to its published statements about climate risk and how it is attempting to manage this.

In this sense, a vote in favour is recommended as a way to show shareholders' support for the board efforts to oversee and manage its relationships with industry associations, whose positioning may not align with either the position adopted by the company or the interests of long-term investors.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Study and Report to Shareholders on Lead-Sheathed Cables

Proponent Shareholder: The Association of BellTel Retirees Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Verizon conduct and publish an independent and comprehensive study on the presence, public health risk, and potential remediation costs of lead-sheathed cables remaining in its infrastructure. This follows an extensive July 2023 Wall Street Journal investigation, which revealed the widespread presence of toxic lead-covered cables left by telecommunications companies, including Verizon's predecessor, AT&T. These cables are allegedly present in soil, water, and overhead locations across the U.S. Experts cited in the report expressed concern that such cables could represent a major, previously unrecognized source of lead exposure, potentially contributing to persistently high lead levels in children. Although Verizon acknowledged the issue, stating that such cables are a small portion of its copper network and that exposure risks are low, it has only released limited data since then. The proponent emphasizes that this issue poses not only public health and environmental risks but also material financial risks to shareholders. For instance, an external analysis estimated that total remediation costs could reach up to $26 billion. Given the lack of transparency since Verizon's initial testing disclosures and increasing regulatory attention, including an EPA investigation, the proponent argues that a more thorough and independent analysis is necessary to protect both public welfare and investor interests. Company's response: Verizon opposes the proposal, asserting that it has already taken proactive, responsible steps to assess and address the issue of lead-sheathed cables following the July 2023 Wall Street Journal article. The company explains that lead-sheathed cables represent a small fraction of its network and have not been installed since the 1950s. In response to the report, Verizon promptly launched an internal investigation, engaged external experts, conducted field tests, and publicly shared the findings, which concluded that the tested sites posed no public health hazard. Additionally, Verizon began working collaboratively with the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and relevant state agencies to examine the matter and determine appropriate next steps. The company's efforts are being closely overseen by its Board of Directors. Verizon emphasizes its commitment to employee and community safety, asserting that its structured regulatory engagement, combined with external expert review, is the most appropriate mechanism for resolving the issue. The Board argues that the requested study and report would duplicate ongoing efforts and potentially interfere with regulatory processes. It concludes that the proposal does not offer added value to shareholders and is therefore unnecessary, given the company's existing response framework and transparency measures.

PIRC analysis: This proposal addresses a pressing environmental and public health issue: the legacy of lead-sheathed cables in the company's network, which may pose contamination risks. Prompted by investigative reports and EPA findings showing lead levels above safety limits, particularly for children, the concern has national scope and serious implications. Left unaddressed, these cables could expose communities to long-term lead contamination, trigger significant cleanup liabilities, and damage the company's reputation amid growing scrutiny. Regulatory and legal risks may escalate if the company continues to provide limited transparency. The proposal calls for a structured, independent assessment-not immediate remediation-focused on hazard mapping, cost estimation, and prioritization. This approach aligns with best practices in environmental risk management and supports informed planning. While the company has initiated testing at a few sites, it has not disclosed a comprehensive network-wide assessment. The requested report would fill this gap, offering shareholders clearer visibility into potential liabilities, enhancing public trust. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Respect Civil Liberties in Advertising Services

Proponent Shareholder: American Family Association

Proponent's argument: The proponent expresses concern that Verizon may be participating in discriminatory advertising practices that negatively affect ad buyers and sellers on the basis of their political or religious views. The proposal highlights Verizon's involvement in the Global Alliance for Responsible Media (GARM), a powerful industry group that aimed to enhance "brand safety" by discouraging advertising on platforms considered to promote "hate speech" or "disinformation." The proponent argues that GARM and similar initiatives have enabled vague, subjective standards that disproportionately censor dissenting or conservative viewpoints. GARM's disbandment after public scrutiny and litigation is cited as evidence of its controversial nature. The proponent links these policies to broader industry practices maintained by major advertising agencies that allegedly limit freedom of expression and religious liberty. This raises potential legal and reputational risks under anti-discrimination and antitrust laws. The proposal requests a board-level evaluation and public report on how Verizon manages and mitigates the risks of discriminatory behavior in advertising services based on political or religious viewpoints. The goal is to increase transparency and ensure that Verizon is not misusing its advertising power or infringing on civil liberties under the guise of brand safety. Company's response: Verizon urges shareholders to vote against the proposal, asserting that its advertising decisions are grounded in legitimate business considerations-not in political or religious bias. The company emphasizes that protecting its brand reputation is critical, and brand safety policies are designed accordingly to avoid association with harmful content, not to suppress particular viewpoints. Verizon selects advertising platforms based on effectiveness, budget, audience reach, and brand impact-not ideology. The company's Code of Conduct explicitly prohibits discrimination and applies across all business operations. Employees receive training to reinforce these standards. Verizon maintains that its commitment to non-discrimination is already embedded in its culture and operations and that it is transparent about its policies. The Board contends that the report requested by the proponent would not add value, as current practices already align with ethical principles and shareholder interests. As such, the company sees no need for further reporting on this issue.

PIRC analysis: While the proposal claims to support viewpoint neutrality, its true focus appears to be on embedding political and religious ideology-particularly conservative social views-into the company's advertising decisions. The resolution aims to portray the exclusion of harmful or polarizing content as ideological discrimination. This conflates brand safety with censorship. The proponents' request appears to be based on a flawed methodology: the fact that the company includes viewpoints that some customers may find objectionable, does not mean that all viewpoints should be acceptable. The company already maintains content-neutral policies to avoid association with divisive or harmful material. Requiring explicit protections for ideological diversity in advertising risks forcing the platforming of content that undermines inclusivity, factual integrity, or public trust. Embedding such a mandate into ad oversight may inadvertently introduce bias and compromise the effectiveness of the company's current brand safety and non-discrimination commitments. The proposal ultimately risks shifting ad policy from protecting brand integrity to arbitrating ideology-an outcome that could increase reputational and legal exposure rather than mitigate it. Opposition is recommended.

3. Approve Remuneration Policy

Changes proposed: i) Increase in amount of long-term incentives permissible under the Remuneration Policy, to address gaps in competitiveness against a global comparator group, ii) Evolution of the structure of the long-term incentive awards through a combination of Performance Shares (PSP) linked to stretching Convatec performance targets, and Restricted Stock Units (RSU) linked to continued employment with the business and iii) Increase the level of shareholding requirement under the Remuneration Policy for the CEO to 500% of salary.

Total variable pay could reach 725% of the salary for the CEO and 525% of the salary for the CFO and is deemed excessive since is higher than 200%. On the Annual Bonus one third of the Bonus is deferred to shares for three years, this is not considered adequate. It would be preferable 50% of the Bonus to be paid in cash and 50% to defer to shares for at least three years. On the LTIP award, there are no non-financial performance measures attached to the LTIP and so the focus of remuneration policy is not the operational performance of the business as a whole or the individual roles of each of the executives in achieving that performance. Instead, the focus of the remuneration policy is financial KPIs, which mainly include factors beyond an individual director's control. Performance period is three years which is not considered sufficiently long-term, however, a two-year holding period applies which is welcomed. Malus and clawback provisions apply to all variable pay.

16. Approve the Convatec Group Omnibus Incentive Plan

It is proposed to the shareholders to approve the Convatec Group Omnibus Incentive Plan. The Omnibus Plan is intended to replace the Long-Term Incentive Plan 2016, the Share Plan 2016 and the Deferred Bonus Plan 2016 (collectively, the "2016 Plans") which are due to expire in 2026. All employees of the Group (including Executive Directors) will be eligible to participate in the Omnibus Plan at the discretion of the Remuneration Committee. Awards under the Omnibus Plan may take the form of, or any combination of: (a) an option to acquire the Company's shares at a nil/nominal or market value exercise price (an "Option"); (b) a conditional right to receive Company shares (a "Conditional Award"); (c) an award of restricted Company shares ("Restricted Shares"); (d) a stock appreciation right (a "SAR"); or (e) a right to receive a cash payment calculated by reference to the market value of the Company's shares (a "Phantom Award"), at the discretion of the Remuneration Committee. Awards will be subject to continued employment. The vesting of Awards may also be subject to the satisfaction of any applicable performance conditions or other conditions. The Remuneration Committee will set the vesting date or dates for Awards when they are granted. Vesting of Awards may also be conditional upon: (a) participants having complied with all regulatory and legal requirements applicable to them or in connection with the Award granted; (b) participants having provided any relevant information and made relevant elections or obtained any necessary dealing consents as reasonably requested by the Company; and (c) participants accepting all relevant terms of the Award, including, for example, provisions relating to malus and clawback. The Remuneration Committee has discretion to impose a post-vesting holding period ("Holding Period") of such length as it determines in respect of vested shares or unexercised Awards.

Plans to increase employee shareholding are considered to be a positive governance practice, as they can contribute to alignment between employees and shareholders. On the other hand, executives are also among the beneficiaries, therefore, an oppose vote is recommended.

THE HOME DEPOT INC AGM - 22-05-2025*4.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair RuleProponent Shareholder: Mr. John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: This proposal, submitted by Mr. John Chevedden, requests that The Home Depot adopt a permanent policy requiring the roles of Board Chair and CEO to be held by separate individuals, with a preference for an independent director as Chair. The proponent asserts that combining these roles presents a conflict of interest and undermines effective oversight. He emphasises that the Chair should serve as a check on CEO authority, a function that cannot be effectively fulfilled by a non-independent or long-tenured director. The proposal distinguishes a Lead Director from an Independent Chair, arguing that even the current Lead Director at The Home Depot lacks genuine independence due to his 25-year tenure. The submission criticises the company's board refreshment practices, citing two directors with over 17 years of service as evidence of insufficient succession planning. Chevedden recommends that the policy be adopted swiftly, but allows for a phased implementation during the current or next CEO transition. He maintains that this structural separation is fundamental to good governance and board accountability, and notes that the proposal does not limit who may serve as CEO, only that the board be independently led. Shareholders are urged to support the proposal as a means of reinforcing oversight and corporate governance integrity.

Company's Response: The Home Depot's Board opposes the proposal, citing longstanding governance practices and historical shareholder rejection of similar initiatives, most recently with 73% voting against in 2023. The Board argues that it should retain flexibility to determine the most effective leadership structure based on the company's needs. While acknowledging the merits of board independence, the Board asserts that its current configuration-where the CEO also serves as Chair-is complemented by a robust Lead Director role and fully independent Board committees. These arrangements, they argue, deliver effective oversight and strategic continuity. The Board also highlights that its Lead Director, Gregory D. Brenneman, is elected annually by the independent directors and brings deep institutional knowledge from decades of service. The company points to its performance and successful CEO transitions in 2014 and 2022 as evidence of the effectiveness of its chosen structure. In these cases, outgoing CEOs remained as Chair for transition periods, a strategy the Board views as beneficial. Ultimately, the Board stresses that its leadership structure is reassessed annually and remains subject to change depending on company needs. Therefore, it recommends shareholders vote against the proposal, underscoring that board flexibility-not rigid structural mandates-is in the best interests of the company and shareholders.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

*5.. Shareholder Resolution: Biodiversity Impact and Dependency AssessmentProponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Domini Impact Equity Fund

Proponent's argument: This proposal, led by Domini Impact Equity Fund and supported by a coalition of co-proponents, calls on The Home Depot to conduct and disclose a comprehensive biodiversity impact and dependency assessment. The proposal stresses that biodiversity is integral to stable economies, climate resilience, and long-term corporate value. The Home Depot is flagged for its sourcing practices, including potential contributions to primary forest loss, illegal logging, and sales of products linked to ecological harm such as PFAS and glyphosate-based pesticides. The proponents argue that although the company has various sustainability initiatives, these are not grounded in a full biodiversity assessment. The absence of such an evaluation prevents investors from understanding the company's exposure to nature-related financial risks and whether current mitigation practices are adequate. The proposal cites global frameworks such as the Taskforce on Nature-related Financial Disclosures (TNFD) and reports from Nature Action 100 that show The Home Depot lags behind in biodiversity benchmarking. It further argues that a value chain wide analysis of biodiversity dependencies and impacts could yield reputational benefits, support regulatory compliance, and uncover business opportunities tied to more sustainable product offerings. Investors are urged to support the resolution to ensure that The Home Depot adopts a scientifically grounded and proactive strategy for biodiversity risk management.

Company's Response: The Board recommends a vote against the proposal, citing extensive existing initiatives that address biodiversity-related concerns. The Home Depot highlights its long-standing commitment to sustainable forestry, dating back to 1999, and notes enhancements made following a 2022 shareholder proposal. In January 2024, the company published a Sustainable Forestry Report, detailing its sourcing practices and policy updates, including the requirement that wood from endangered regions be FSC®-certified. The company has worked with an external environmental law firm to assess and verify sourcing policies and conducts supplier surveys to monitor biodiversity initiatives. It also voluntarily responds to the CDP forestry questionnaire, which aligns with the TNFD framework. The company argues that its disclosures are evolving and adequate, and that further reporting as proposed would be duplicative, burdensome, and not materially additive. Additionally, The Home Depot emphasises its Eco Actions program and partnerships with local growers to support biodiversity at the consumer level. These include product offerings that encourage pollinator support and native landscaping. The Board concludes that the proposed assessment would introduce unnecessary costs and complexity, given the firm's existing practices, transparency efforts, and commitments to continuous improvement in sustainability reporting.

PIRC analysis: Across its value chain, The Home Depot may be contributing to environmental impacts such as biodiversity loss, degradation of native forests, desertification, and unsustainable land use. A comprehensive biodiversity assessment would equip the company to better understand these impacts-particularly in relation to raw material sourcing-and manage associated operational, reputational, and financial risks. Proactively identifying and mitigating nature-related risks aligns with long-term corporate sustainability goals and supports stronger stakeholder trust. Publishing such a report would also enhance transparency across the company's sourcing and supply chain, providing both shareholders and stakeholders with critical insight into how nature-related dependencies are managed. This would support more informed strategic decision-making, as well as improved engagement with suppliers on broader environmental priorities. Furthermore, the initiative would help align the company's practices with emerging regulatory frameworks and global benchmarks, such as the Taskforce on Nature-related Financial Disclosures (TNFD) and the UN Sustainable Development Goals. For these reasons, support for this proposal is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Report On Packaging Policies For Plastics

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by As You Sow Foundation Fund

Proponent's argument: This proposal, led by As You Sow Foundation Fund, requests that The Home Depot publish a report outlining how it will align with its retail peers in committing to make all its packaging curbside recyclable, reusable, or compostable. The proponents highlight the global plastic pollution crisis, referencing data from the Pew Charitable Trusts that underscore the urgent need to reduce plastic production and improve recyclability to prevent worsening environmental damage. They argue that while Home Depot has set a goal to reduce or convert 200 million pounds of virgin plastic by 2028, it has yet to disclose its total plastic footprint, leaving investors with an incomplete picture of its plastic use and reduction strategy. Unlike competitors such as Walmart, Target, and Lowe's, Home Depot has not joined the New Plastics Economy Global Commitment or set time bound targets for packaging recyclability. The proposal warns that without meaningful changes, the company risks falling behind in sustainability leadership and facing financial liability if extended producer responsibility regulations are enacted. The proponents request that the report include quantification of total plastic use, a firm timeline for packaging redesign, and a strategy to reduce overall plastic usage through material substitution and innovation.

Company's Response: The Home Depot's Board opposes the proposal, arguing that its current efforts sufficiently address plastic use and packaging sustainability. The company highlights its circularity strategy, in place since 2019, which focuses on eliminating hard to recycle materials and promoting supplier innovation in packaging design. Notably, The Home Depot aims to reduce or convert 200 million pounds of virgin plastic in its products by 2028. In Fiscal 2023, it achieved a goal of eliminating expanded polystyrene (EPS) foam and PVC film from new private brand packaging. The company also recycled over 19 million pounds of plastic across its operations. It emphasises that its public disclosures, including annual sustainability reports, already cover these actions in detail. Additionally, The Home Depot argues that the proposal's call for universal curbside recyclability is currently impractical due to inconsistent standards across jurisdictions. The Board believes that the report would impose unnecessary costs without significantly enhancing transparency or impact, as the company's practices and disclosures already reflect a strong commitment to sustainability in packaging. Accordingly, the Board recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Reporting on sustainability issues is in shareholders' interests, not only to identify material risks and opportunities the company may face, but also to ensure that the Board and management are actively engaging with these critical topics. While The Home Depot highlights existing initiatives to reduce plastic use and improve packaging, its disclosures fall short of offering transparent metrics on total plastic use, how much packaging is recyclable or actually recycled, or what quantifiable goals exist to meet industry benchmarks such as 50% recyclability. Without this clarity, shareholders are unable to assess the company's progress or credibility in meeting plastic reduction objectives. The requested report would provide necessary insights into the scope of plastic related impacts, allowing investors to evaluate the company's alignment with best practices and peer standards. It would also support strategic oversight by highlighting areas where corrective action is required. Given the scale of global regulatory and reputational risks tied to plastic pollution, greater transparency through the proposed report is warranted. Support for the resolution is therefore recommended.

DEUTSCHE BANK AG AGM - 22-05-2025

15. Shareholder Resolution: Appoint Special Auditor in Connection With the Lawsuits and Appraisal Proceedings Relating to the Takeover of Postbank by Former and Current Members of the Management Board and Supervisory Board

Proponent Shareholder: Riebeck-Brauerei von 1862 GmbH

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests the appointment of a special auditor to investigate alleged gross violations by current and former Management and Supervisory Board members of Deutsche Bank, including Mr. Sewing and Mr. von Moltke, in connection with the failure to form timely and adequate litigation provisions related to the Postbank acquisition. Specifically, the proposal alleges that despite internal and external legal assessments suggesting a high probability of litigation losses, no provisions were formed in the 2022 and 2023 financial statements. It further asserts that the delay in provisioning was aimed at misrepresenting the bank's financial performance, particularly the achievement of an 8% RoTE in both years. The proposal also suggests the deliberate submission of misleading financial-reporting representations in Germany and the US, and raises concerns about the motivations behind late provisioning, made only after a court hearing in April 2024 that led to a €1.3bn provision and a sharp fall in market capitalization. The audit should examine communications (including private messaging apps), assess legal advice sources, determine whether career incentives played a role in suppressing litigation risks, and evaluate any financial consequences stemming from delayed capital measures such as costly Tier I bonds. The proponent lists several auditors in a priority sequence to conduct the investigation.

Company's response: The Supervisory Board opposes the proposal, asserting that all provisioning decisions were made in accordance with legal and auditing standards. It argues that, until April 2024, external legal assessments, both by existing counsel and a second independent law firm, determined the probability of litigation loss in the Postbank matter to be below 50%, which precluded provisioning under applicable standards. The Management Board only reassessed the risk after oral statements by the Higher Regional Court of Cologne in April 2024 indicated possible adverse findings, prompting the €1.3bn provision. The company rejects claims that this reflected prior misconduct or suppression of risk. Regarding appraisal proceedings, the bank maintains there is no legal basis for the alleged €700 million risk and states that even if the plaintiffs succeed, the financial outflow would be significantly lower. The company emphasizes that both the Supervisory Board and the Audit Committee consistently consulted with the auditor, who never objected to the provisioning treatment. Based on this, the Supervisory Board recommends voting against the proposal to appoint a special auditor.

PIRC Recommendation: The proposal raises serious and substantiated concerns regarding financial transparency, accountability, and the potential suppression of litigation-related provisioning, which, if true, could constitute material governance failings. The timing and magnitude of the litigation provision, along with indications of suppressed legal risks, merit an independent audit. The complexity and severity of the allegations, combined with potential financial and reputational damage to the company, justify enhanced scrutiny via a special auditor. The requested scope is appropriately defined and proportionate to the potential impact on shareholder interests. Support is recommended.

16. Shareholder Resolution: Appoint Special Auditor in Connection With Lawsuits Relating to Foreign Currency Loans in Poland by Former and Current Members of the Management Board and Supervisory Board

Proponent Shareholder: Riebeck Brauerei von 1862 GmbH

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls for the appointment of a special auditor to investigate alleged failures by current and former Deutsche Bank board members, particularly regarding the formation of litigation provisions related to foreign currency loans in Poland. The resolution asserts that a EUR 300 million provision formed in 2024 raises suspicions that prior-year financial statements for 2022 and 2023 were materially misstated. The concern is that no provision was made earlier despite legal risks being widely known for years, which might have constituted a breach of fiduciary duty. The proponent points to statements made by CEO Sewing at the 2025 annual press conference admitting that litigation provisions would now be consistently applied, implicitly acknowledging a lapse in previous years. The audit is to examine whether internal or external legal assessments pointing to a predominant probability of loss were overlooked and what the motives were behind this. The proposal also raises concerns over whether previous misreporting or suppression of risks was intentional, possibly to project improved financial performance or regulatory compliance. Communication channels such as WhatsApp or iMessage are to be reviewed for any relevant discussions among board members. As with resolution 15, the proponent nominates a series of professional auditors in sequence to ensure thorough and independent scrutiny.

Company's response: The Supervisory Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that all provisioning decisions in the matter of Polish foreign currency loans were handled appropriately and in line with legal and accounting standards. The Management Board has maintained that a provision was only warranted in 2024 following a reassessment of the litigation risks, and that there had been no breach of duty in prior years. The company does not provide specific commentary addressing the legal risks in Poland but maintains that its risk assessments were continually reviewed in conjunction with external legal advisors and auditors. It reaffirms that the auditor never raised any objections concerning the treatment of provisions related to this matter. The company insists that previous assessments supported the view that provisioning was not necessary before 2024 and denies any deliberate withholding or misstatement of risk. Given this background, the Supervisory Board advises shareholders to vote against appointing a special auditor as proposed.

PIRC Recommendation: The proposal raises important questions about the integrity and timing of litigation provisioning in relation to well-documented legal risks. The sudden recognition of a EUR 300 million provision in 2024, without clear explanation of changed circumstances, warrants independent examination. The proponent makes a compelling case that the legal and financial implications of the Poland FX loans have been known for several years, suggesting a possible failure to act in prior periods. Ensuring that shareholders receive accurate and timely financial information is a cornerstone of good governance. A special audit would provide necessary transparency and potentially safeguard the company from reputational and regulatory risks stemming from historical omissions. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Written Consent

Proponent: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: Shareholders request that the board of directors take such steps as may be necessary to permit written consent by shareholders entitled to cast the minimum number of votes that would be necessary to authorize the action at a meeting at which all shareholders entitled to vote thereon were present and voting. This includes shareholder ability to initiate any appropriate topic for written consent. Shareholders argue the following: "It is important for shareholders to have a right to act by written consent at a company like VeriSign which has a flawed shareholder right to call for a special shareholder meeting and has 5-years of a relatively stagnant stock price during a robust stock market. To guard against the VeriSign Board of Directors becoming complacent shareholders need the ability to act by written consent to help the VeriSign adopt new strategies when the need arises. The best strategies for turning around a company do not necessarily come from a company's existing shareholders. This proposal is necessary due to the flawed form of a shareholder right to call for a special meeting at VeriSign. If new VeriSign shareholders have a plan to restore growth to VeriSign they have to wait a year for their shares to age before calling for a special shareholder meeting. Meanwhile the VeriSign Board of Directors can frivolously ignore plans to restore growth to VeriSign from new shareholders because by the time the new shares age the window of opportunity will be gone for the new shareholders. This is why acting by written consent is important to VeriSign because there is no one-year wait requirement for shareholders to act by written consent."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "In 2021, the Board proactively lowered our special meeting threshold from 25% to 10%. Thus, one or more stockholders owning as few as 10% of our outstanding common stock may call a special meeting of stockholders. A special meeting permits stockholders, the Board, and Company management to vote on matters in between annual meetings. Unlike action by written consent, a special meeting of stockholders allows all stockholders to participate collectively in a single meeting. The ability for stockholders owning 10% of our outstanding shares to call a special meeting represents a significant right—and one that is significantly more stockholder-friendly than the right at most other S&P 500 companies. Our 10% special meeting threshold is more favorable to stockholders than the special meeting rights at approximately 88% of the 471 S&P 500 companies surveyed by FactSet, and only one of our peers provides its stockholders with a comparable special meeting right. Finally, our Board amended the Bylaws to extend the time during which special meeting requests containing certain items of business can be submitted from 90 to 180 days confirming again the Board's commitment to maintaining a meaningful and appropriate special meeting right for stockholders. [...] This provision allows stockholders owning 3% or more of our outstanding common stock for three years the right to nominate director candidates constituting up to 20% of our Board, and to have those nominees included in our proxy materials. This proxy access right complements the ability of stockholders to call a special meeting to voice their views in a way that is less onerous than taking action by written consent, as requested by the proposal, which would require proposed actions to be approved by holders of at least a majority (or higher if required by Delaware law or our certificate of incorporation) of our outstanding shares."

PIRC analysis: There are emergency situations where convening a special meeting might take too long or be too difficult, and written consents may be gathered more quickly. Since the company has weak or no special meeting rights, written consent rights are very important. A vote for the resolution is recommended.

3. Approve Remuneration Policy

Under the 2025 remuneration policy, the requirement to defer one-third of the annual bonus into shares has been removed for Executive Directors who have met their shareholding guideline; however, the deferral still applies where the guideline has not been met, with shares vesting after two years. The cap on Executive Directors' benefits allowance has also been removed. The total maximum variable remuneration opportunity is 500% of salary (Annual Bonus: 200%, LTIP: 300%), which is considered excessive. Annual Bonus performance measures include financial, strategic, operational, ESG, or personal targets. LTIP performance measures, typically assessed independently over three years, include Relative TSR, Absolute TSR, and average Scope 1 & 2 CO emissions intensity, with 25% vesting at threshold and 100% at maximum. Although the performance period is three years, a two-year post-vesting holding requirement applies, extending the time horizon to five years. Malus and clawback provisions apply to both bonus and LTIP. Executive Directors must build and maintain a shareholding of 200% of salary and retain at least 50% of post-tax vested shares until compliant, with the guideline continuing to apply for two years post-employment unless the Committee decides otherwise. Rating: ADB, therefore opposition is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Declassify the Board

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden, on behalf of James McRitchie Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Charles Schwab reorganise its Board of Directors so that all directors are elected annually rather than on a staggered, classified basis. The proponent argues that declassified boards promote stronger accountability and align with governance best practices, noting that 90% of S&P 500 companies have adopted annual elections. Referencing studies from Harvard Law School and data from proxy advisory firms, the proposal cites widespread shareholder and institutional support for declassification, with average approval rates exceeding 70%. It contends that staggered boards can entrench underperforming directors and insulate management, undermining shareholder influence. The proponent also highlights governance concerns at Schwab, including supermajority voting requirements, the absence of proxy access, and long board tenure. The proposal emphasises that annual elections would increase responsiveness, improve board performance, and offer shareholders more direct influence over corporate governance, particularly in cases of dissatisfaction with pay or strategy. It calls for a phased or immediate transition to a one-year term structure to enhance transparency, performance, and long-term shareholder value. Company's Response: The Board opposes the proposal, stating that maintaining a classified board is in the best interests of the company and its shareholders. Schwab argues that the structure supports long-term strategic planning, enhances board continuity, and strengthens oversight in a complex regulatory environment. The company notes that a declassification proposal it put forward in 2022 failed to achieve the 80% threshold needed for approval, indicating limited shareholder support for structural change. The Board also contends that staggered terms help preserve institutional knowledge and provide stability, particularly during periods of volatility or in the face of potential hostile takeovers. According to the Board, declassification could result in a full board turnover within a single year, potentially weakening oversight and strategic consistency. It also emphasises that all directors are subject to annual evaluations and uphold fiduciary duties regardless of term length. The Board concludes that the current governance structure strikes the appropriate balance between accountability and long-term performance, and that implementing this proposal would not be an effective use of company resources at this time.

PIRC analysis: The practice of electing different classes of director each year, a classified board, is no longer viewed as best practice as it can be used as an anti-takeover device and could serve to entrench and insulate both underperforming directors and managers. Shareholder concerns in relation to director competence as well as other board issues can more appropriately be raised if all directors face election each year. It is considered that declassification of the board will bring the company in line with best practice, especially given the other practices raised by the Proponent that also insulate the board from shareholders.

4.. Amend Certificate of Incorporation to Reflect Delaware Law Provisions Regarding Officer Exculpation and Other Immaterial Changes

It is proposed that the Restated Certificate of Incorporation of Juniper, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Cure Purported Nomination Defects

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by James McRitchie

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that ServiceNow amend its bylaws to require that the Board notify shareholders of any facially apparent defects in nomination notices within 14 days of receipt and allow the shareholders an opportunity to cure such defects. The proposal argues that fair and accessible nomination processes are essential to meaningful shareholder engagement and oversight, and that overly burdensome or opaque bylaw requirements can effectively nullify shareholder rights. Citing legal commentary and case law, the proponent warns that current bylaw regimes in many corporations create procedural traps that may invalidate nominations on technical grounds without warning or opportunity for remedy. The proposed amendment does not seek to remove procedural requirements, but rather to balance the board's right to orderly notice with the shareholders' right to participate in director elections. The proposal highlights the increasing trend toward shareholder access and argues that this change would reduce the risk of disenfranchisement and reinforce governance legitimacy. It concludes by encouraging shareholders to support a measure that aligns board processes with principles of transparency and fairness.

Company's Response : ServiceNow's Board recommends voting against the proposal. The Board contends that existing bylaws already provide a clear and customary framework for shareholder nominations, including published deadlines and requirements aligned with S&P 500 peers. It argues that the suggested bylaw amendment would introduce ambiguity and expose the company to novel and unnecessary litigation risks. Specifically, it could raise interpretative disputes over what constitutes a "facially apparent" defect, when such a defect must be identified, and what constitutes sufficient cure or notification. The Board notes that courts already require boards to act equitably and in good faith, and thus additional bylaw provisions are unnecessary. Furthermore, the company warns that the proposed change may invite procedural gamesmanship and distract from strategic business oversight. ServiceNow concludes that adopting an untested procedural right would not serve shareholder interests and could undermine the effectiveness of its established nomination processes.

PIRC analysis: The proposal aims to strengthen shareholder democracy by amending the company's bylaws to ensure that shareholders submitting director nominations are promptly informed of any facially apparent defects in their submissions and are given an opportunity to cure them. This procedural safeguard would help ensure that good-faith nominations are not rejected on technical grounds, thereby reducing the risk of disenfranchisement. The request is modest and does not eliminate any of the substantive requirements for nominating directors. Rather, it reinforces procedural fairness while preserving the company's ability to enforce standards and timelines. In addition, the proposal could help facilitate more inclusive board nomination processes, thereby improving the potential for increased independent oversight. Given that shareholders already face high informational and procedural thresholds when submitting nominations, the right to cure would contribute to a more equitable balance between board authority and shareholder access. Support is therefore recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Remove the One-Year Holding Period Requirement to Call a Special Meeting of Shareholders

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls for the removal of the current one-year holding requirement that shareholders must satisfy to be eligible to call a special shareholder meeting at ServiceNow. The proponent argues that this provision renders the existing 15% ownership threshold ineffective in practice, particularly in emergency or time sensitive situations. By preventing recently acquired shares from contributing toward the 15% threshold, the rule restricts shareholder responsiveness and weakens the effectiveness of the special meeting right. The proponent asserts that shareholders should be able to act decisively in cases of poor performance or governance failures, and the current holding period is an unnecessary obstacle. Allowing recently acquired shares to count toward calling a meeting would increase the flexibility and urgency with which shareholders can respond to corporate crises. The proposal is framed as a governance improvement aimed at enhancing accountability, incentivising better board performance, and giving shareholders a meaningful mechanism to trigger action when required.

Company's Response: ServiceNow's Board recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that the existing framework which requires 15% of shares held for at least one year to call a special meeting strikes the right balance between responsiveness and protection against misuse. The Board emphasises that special meetings are costly, complex undertakings that can distract from strategic business priorities. It maintains that the one-year holding period ensures that only long-term investors with sustained interest in the company can initiate such significant actions. The Board also argues that the proposal could open the door to short-term or opportunistic agendas by transient investors. Further, ServiceNow points to the broader governance framework, including proxy access, annual elections, shareholder engagement, and the recent elimination of supermajority voting, as evidence that shareholders already enjoy strong governance rights. The Board concludes that the proposal is unnecessary and could disrupt the company's well functioning governance model.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold adopted by the company, which is welcomed. However it is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

Changes proposed: i) increase our shareholding policies from 300% to 450% of base salary, ii) Recruitment: Introduction of the exception for the Remuneration Committee to grant awards in the recruitment of the Executive without shareholders approval and iii) All legacy arrangement are removing.

Annual Bonus is paid 50% in cash and 50% deferred to shares for a two-year period which is in line with best practice. It is noted that both the Annual Bonus and the Long-Term Incentive Awards have non-financial performance measures which is welcomed. However, concerns are raised for the remuneration policy since total variable pay could reach 600% of the salary which is deemed excessive since is higher than 200%. Performance period for the LTIP award is three years which is not considered sufficiently long-term, however, a two-year holding period applies which is welcomed. Dividends may accrue on vesting awards from the date of grant. Such rewards misalign shareholders and executive interests as shareholders must subscribe for shares in order to receive dividends whereas participants in the scheme do not. There are concerns that annual bonus targets include health and safety targets, when ensuring the health and safety of colleagues should be a bare minimum and Executives should not be financially incentivised for achieving this. Malus and clawback provisions apply to all variable pay.

It is proposed to amend the articles in order to allow virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Human Rights Impact Assessment

Proponent Shareholder: Mercy Investment Services, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Merck's board to oversee a formal human rights due diligence process that results in a publicly available Human Rights Impact Assessment (HRIA). This assessment should specifically cover Merck's most salient human rights risks related to the right to health and access to medicines. The HRIA should identify actual and potential adverse impacts, disclose the stakeholder engagement process, and explain how the findings will be integrated into company decision making. The proponent emphasises Merck's existing commitment to human rights, including its own Human Rights Public Policy Statement, which references internationally recognised standards such as Article 12 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social, and Cultural Rights and UN Sustainable Development Goal 3.8. However, despite acknowledging access to medicines as a critical issue, Merck has not disclosed any formal HRIA results from its due diligence. The proponent points to actions inconsistent with Merck's stated commitments, including legal action against the Inflation Reduction Act and trade association lobbying efforts against access enhancing policies. Additionally, Merck ranks below average on all three technical areas assessed by the Access to Medicine Index. The proposal contends that a transparent HRIA would help shareholders assess and mitigate the human rights risks associated with Merck's products, business relationships, and policy engagements, and better align its operations with its stated commitments to access and equity in healthcare.

Company's response: Merck's Board recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that the requested HRIA would impose significant costs and effort without yielding added shareholder value. The company maintains that it already has a comprehensive human rights framework in place, including a detailed Human Rights Public Policy and disclosures integrated into its Code of Conduct and Business Partner Code of Conduct. These documents outline Merck's adherence to international standards such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, ILO principles, OECD guidelines, and the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. Merck states it conducts regular human rights due diligence, including impact assessments, and these practices are integrated into third-party risk management and supply chain monitoring. The company highlights a recent enterprise wide human rights assessment conducted with external experts, which included benchmarking, internal policy reviews, and a focus on governance, stakeholder engagement, and remediation. This process, Merck asserts, ensures its approach remains up to date and effective. Given these existing mechanisms, the Board considers the shareholder proposal duplicative and unnecessary. It asserts that the company's current reporting and governance structures already address human rights risks in a manner aligned with shareholder interests and global best practices, making an additional HRIA redundant.

PIRC analysis: The Human Rights Impact Assessment (HRIA) is a format that distinguishes itself from other due diligence methods by focusing specifically on identifying, understanding, assessing, and addressing the adverse effects of business projects or activities on the human rights enjoyment of impacted rights-holders, such as workers and community members. Risks related to human and labour rights across operations and supply chain can have significant reputational and financial consequences for a company and it is in the best interests of shareholders to be informed of the Company's exposure to and management of such risks. While the company indicates that it is committed to respecting human rights and has already fulfilled or will fulfil the actions included in the proposal, it fails to make a case as of why this proposal be counter productive. Overall, it does not seem that the company performed an actual Human Rights Impact Assessments that will allow disclosing to shareholders a data-based picture of its exposure and corresponding measures of prevention, mitigation and remediation, which in turn would be essential, in order to uphold company's policies on human rights and labour rights, as well as minimise corresponding risks. Support is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Tax Transparency

Proponent Shareholder: Sisters of the Holy Name of Jesus and Mary, US-Ontario Province[nelwine]Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Merck to publish a tax transparency report based on the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI) Tax Standard. This report should provide country-by-country reporting (CbCR) of revenues, profits, and tax payments by jurisdiction, thereby enabling investors to assess Merck's tax strategies, risk exposure, and alignment with responsible corporate practices. The proposal argues that Merck's current limited disclosures are inadequate-highlighting ongoing scrutiny regarding profit shifting practices, including allegations that Merck booked profits from its cancer drug Keytruda in the Netherlands to avoid U.S. taxes. The proponent emphasises that Merck's lack of disaggregated foreign tax information hinders investors from evaluating regulatory risks and long-term value creation. With global tax reforms advancing, including new U.S. and EU reporting mandates and an Australian law mandating CbCR aligned with the GRI standard, the proposal asserts that voluntary alignment would position Merck as a leader in transparency. The GRI Tax Standard, supported by investors representing over $10 trillion, was developed to address concerns about tax avoidance and inequality. The proposal stresses that Merck already provides similar confidential disclosures to tax authorities, making public reporting feasible with minimal additional burden. It concludes that aligning with the GRI standard would help restore trust, manage reputational risks, and better inform shareholders.

Company's response: Merck's Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that it is unnecessary and potentially detrimental. The company already provides extensive tax disclosures via SEC filings, detailing U.S. federal, state, and international tax payments, and makes available its Global Tax Strategy, which outlines its governance, compliance, and risk management approach to taxation. Merck reports that it complies with all applicable tax laws and regularly updates shareholders on tax-related matters through its Audit Committee. Moreover, it already submits confidential country-by-country tax reports to relevant authorities, including the IRS, and is preparing to comply with upcoming mandatory public CbCR requirements in the EU and Australia. Merck contends that adopting the GRI Tax Standard now-before broader market adoption-would be premature and non-standard among U.S. peers. The company also raises concerns that public GRI-aligned CbCR could inadvertently expose sensitive proprietary data, such as operational cost structures, that could compromise competitiveness. It further notes that, contrary to the proponent's claims, there is limited adoption of the GRI Tax Standard by major U.S. corporations. Given the adequacy of Merck's current disclosures and its commitment to compliance and transparency, the Board sees no additional shareholder value in the proposed report and views the associated risks and burden as unjustified.

PIRC analysis: This proposal is calling for disclosures that are aligned to an established reporting framework and is considered to be in line with the tax framework contained in overseas regulatory settings, like the European Union Shareholders Rights Directive. This proposal reflects a growing trend towards providing more detailed tax information on each jurisdiction where a multinational operates. It is considered that the Company should pursue to pay taxes where its businesses are located, not where they can gain the most advantageous fiscal treatment. Tax planning is considered to be a board responsibility and a core governance issue, as such this proposal will bring improvements to an existing field of work for the board. The resolution is not unduly prescriptive and it is considered beneficial for management and shareholders to look at data from a local-global perspective, allowing to act on local potential flaws within the company's global strategy. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Revisit DEI Goals in Executive Pay Incentives

Proponent Shareholder: The National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Merck's board to revisit and consider eliminating Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) milestones from executive compensation programs. Citing the 2023 U.S. Supreme Court decision in Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard, the proposal argues that corporate DEI initiatives are facing increasing legal scrutiny and litigation risk. It highlights that many universities and corporations have scaled back or ended DEI programs due to concerns about potential violations of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. The proponent asserts that Merck's DEI-based incentive structures such as allocating 10% of the executive scorecard to "sustainability" goals that include employee engagement and inclusion create discriminatory outcomes and expose the company to reputational and legal risk. Merck's DEI initiatives include tailored leadership development programs for specific demographic groups, including Black, Latino, LGBTQ+, and female employees. The proponent claims these programs could be viewed as exclusionary or as operating racial or identity based preferences. It argues that incentive structures tied to such programs could appear to enforce informal hiring quotas or set asides, a practice increasingly vulnerable to legal challenge. In light of this, the proposal requests that Merck's Compensation and Management Development Committee evaluate the current executive incentive guidelines and assess whether DEI linked targets should be removed to mitigate potential risk.

Company's response: Merck's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it is unnecessary because the Compensation and Management Development (C&MD) Committee already performs the oversight functions the proposal seeks. The Committee annually reviews the design, metrics, and weighting of performance measures in the executive compensation framework to ensure alignment with shareholder interests and corporate strategic objectives. The Company Scorecard, used to determine annual cash incentives, includes a 10% weighting for sustainability related goals that encompass enabling global access to healthcare and fostering employee engagement and inclusion elements that reflect long-term value creation. These metrics are regularly evaluated and are based on operational outcomes and employee feedback, including survey data. The Board emphasises that the Scorecard metrics are not arbitrary, but rather directly tied to the Company's strategic priorities, including R&D pipeline development and global health impact. Moreover, the CD&A section of Merck's proxy filing outlines the exact components and evaluation of these metrics, ensuring full transparency for shareholders. The Board rejects the assertion that these programs are discriminatory, instead affirming that they promote inclusion and strategic growth. In the Board's view, the current compensation structure is appropriate, well governed, and aligned with best practices, rendering the proposal redundant and misaligned with Merck's values and objectives.

PIRC analysis: This proposal seeks to remove DEI related milestones from executive pay incentives based on the premise that such initiatives expose the company to legal, reputational, and governance risks. However, the underlying assumption-that DEI programs are inherently discriminatory or pose value destroying risks is not supported by the prevailing body of research and business practice. A wide range of evidence links diversity and inclusion to enhanced corporate performance, innovation, talent attraction and retention, and better stakeholder engagement. Rather than constituting a governance failure, integrating DEI into performance incentives reflects good governance practice by aligning executive accountability with long-term value creation and social responsibility goals. The proposal's framing appears ideologically driven, positioning DEI as a liability, which risks undermining board discretion and management autonomy in setting human capital strategy. There is no evidence that Merck's DEI-linked compensation mechanisms violate applicable laws or governance principles. On the contrary, the company's approach-including regular board oversight and transparency through its Scorecard demonstrates alignment with its strategic goals and responsiveness to stakeholder expectations. Supporting this proposal could send the wrong signal about shareholder priorities, potentially discouraging beneficial DEI practices and weakening commitments to workplace equity and inclusion. For these reasons, opposition to the resolution is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Civil Liberties in Advertising Services

Proponent Shareholder: The Bahnsen Family Trust dated July 14, 2003

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Merck's Board produce a report evaluating how it oversees potential risks related to discrimination in advertising practices based on political or religious viewpoints. The proponent argues that Merck's participation in advertising consortia such as the Global Alliance for Responsible Media (GARM) may have contributed to the exclusion or demonetization of certain media platforms and voices, potentially exposing the company to legal and reputational risks. GARM, supported by major global advertisers, was accused of enforcing vague content standards and promoting the deplatforming of views labeled as "disinformation" or "insensitive," which the proponent sees as a threat to free expression and ideological diversity. The proposal points to high-profile controversies, such as platform boycotts and de-ranking of news outlets, to argue that such practices have contributed to public backlash and litigation-particularly following GARM's dissolution after legal action from X (formerly Twitter). The proponent contends that Merck, by aligning its advertising strategies with these entities, may have exposed itself to antitrust and anti-discrimination risks. A report is therefore requested to ensure that Merck is not complicit in censorship or bias and is safeguarding civil liberties in its advertising decisions, particularly regarding the treatment of buyers and sellers based on protected viewpoints.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, stating that it would be costly, time-consuming, and redundant given Merck's existing governance structures and disclosures. The company affirms its commitment to responsible marketing practices rooted in ethics and compliance with relevant laws, including those governing healthcare advertising, antitrust, and competition. Merck highlights its Code of Conduct, regular compliance training, and oversight by the Audit Committee as mechanisms that ensure its advertising decisions adhere to regulatory and ethical standards. The Board also cites Merck's robust Enterprise Risk Management (ERM) process, which identifies and manages emerging business risks and aligns risk oversight with corporate values and ethics. In the Board's view, these systems sufficiently cover the scope of the concerns raised by the proposal. It emphasizes that the Audit Committee monitors compliance across the organization and regularly reports to the Board, including updates from the chief ethics and compliance officer. Furthermore, Merck's 2023/2024 Impact Report outlines its standards for marketing conduct. The Board concludes that the requested report would not yield meaningful additional insights or shareholder value and instead could divert resources from core business priorities. Therefore, the proposal is deemed unnecessary and not in the best interests of the company or its shareholders.

PIRC analysis: While transparency around advertising policies and political neutrality is important, this resolution appears to be ideologically motivated and misrepresents existing governance and oversight structures. The proposal reflects a broader campaign from politically aligned groups aiming to pressure companies to roll back established policies on brand safety, misinformation, and platform standards under the guise of protecting civil liberties. The resolution does not focus on enhancing governance or improving disclosure but instead seeks to reframe corporate advertising decisions as evidence of systemic bias against certain viewpoints. There is no substantive evidence that Merck has engaged in discriminatory advertising practices or violated civil rights or antitrust law. Moreover, Merck already provides extensive information about its ethical marketing policies, board oversight of risk and compliance, and commitment to lawful and responsible corporate conduct. Requiring a new report based on speculative claims would divert resources and encourage unnecessary politicization of operational decisions. Instead of improving shareholder value or transparency, the resolution could set a precedent for ideological interference in routine business practices. A vote against the proposal is recommended.

6. Amend Articles: Limit the liability of Certain Officers

It is proposed that the Certificate of Incorporation, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

META PLATFORMS INC AGM - 28-05-2025

1.01. Re-elect Peggy Alford - Non-Executive Director

Independent Non-Executive Director and Chair of the Compensation, Nominating & Governance Committee. At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the Chair of Compensation, Nominating & Governance Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure. It is considered that the Chair of the Compensation, Nominating & Governance Committee is responsible for the company's executive compensation, and there are concerns with the company's executive compensation.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Compensation, Nominating & Governance Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Withhold is recommended.

3.. Approve 2025 Equity Incentive Plan

It is proposed to approve a restricted share plan for employees and corporate officers. The Board would receive the authority to set beneficiaries and other conditions. After allotment, shares will be restricted for three years, which is not considered to be sufficiently long term. The Company states that exercise of shares will be based on targets, which at this time remain undisclosed.

Plans to increase employee shareholding are considered to be a positive governance practice, as they can contribute to alignment between employees and shareholders. On the other hand, executives are also among the beneficiaries: it is considered that support should not be given to stock or share option plans that do not lay out clear performance criteria, targets and conditions. On balance, opposition is recommended.

5.. Approve the Frequency of Future Advisory Votes on Executive Compensation

The Company is providing shareholders with an advisory vote on whether the advisory vote on executive compensation should be held every one, two or three years. The Board is required by Section 951 of The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act to offer this vote on the frequency of a say-on-pay proposal not less than every six years, although they have the option to offer this proposal more often.

The Board of Directors recommends an annual vote. It is considered that an annual vote on executive compensation is best practice for companies. Executive compensation comprises both fixed and variable pay elements, with the variable including share based incentive awards and cash bonuses over which the compensation committee have discretion. Decisions affecting the quantum and design of variable pay are made annually by the committee and it is therefore appropriate that shareholder approval is sought at the maximum frequency permitted by the new legislation. Contentious compensation payments and issues could occur in the intervening years between votes, if the frequency is less than annually. A one year frequency is therefore recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Dual Class Capital Structure

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Northstar Asset Management, Inc. Funded Pension Plan

Proponent's argument: The proponents, Northstar Asset Management, Inc. Funded Pension Plan as lead filer and Mercy Investment Services, Inc. as co-filer, request that the Meta Board adopt a recapitalisation plan to provide that each outstanding share has one vote, eliminating the disproportionate voting rights currently held by Class B shareholders. The proposal recommends a phased approach over seven years or another reasonable timeframe determined by the Board. The proponents argue that Meta's dual-class structure, which gives CEO Mark Zuckerberg control over the majority of shareholder votes despite owning only 14% of the economic interest, has contributed to repeated scandals and regulatory penalties, severely impacting shareholder value and public trust. They highlight examples such as the massive stock price drop in 2018, data privacy violations, misinformation controversies, and recent fines from European authorities for data protection and antitrust violations. Shareholders contend that without equal voting rights, they are unable to effectively hold management accountable and address systemic governance weaknesses. The proposal points to governance best practices endorsed by groups like the Council of Institutional Investors (CII) and the International Corporate Governance Network (ICGN), which support the gradual elimination of dual-class share structures. Outside shareholder support for similar proposals reached 84% in 2024, demonstrating strong investor demand for voting equity. The proponents assert that better governance through equal voting rights is essential to preserving shareholder value as Meta navigates complex new technological and regulatory challenges.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. The company argues that its current dual-class capital structure remains in the best interests of shareholders by allowing management and the Board to prioritise long-term strategic goals without undue short-term market pressures. Meta's Compensation, Nominating, and Governance Committee regularly evaluates corporate governance best practices and continues to support the existing structure. The Board claims that a multi-class voting structure enables focus on Meta's mission of advancing human connection and innovation, and cites studies suggesting that such structures can enhance long-term performance. The Board also emphasises that it maintains strong independent oversight, with a substantial majority of independent directors and fully independent Board committees. Ambassador Robert Kimmitt, the Lead Independent Director, is tasked with providing robust independent Board leadership. Meta highlights its shareholder engagement programs and recent efforts to refresh the Board with new independent directors. The Board argues that the requested change is unnecessary at this time, that current governance practices are effective in protecting shareholder interests, and that the existing capital structure supports long-term value creation. Accordingly, the Board believes that maintaining the current structure best serves shareholders and recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: It is considered that the existing class structure treats the majority of shareholders inequitably: the principle of one-share-one-vote is considered to be best practice and voting rights should be allocated equitably. Support is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Vote Counting Standard

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Treasurer for the State of Illinois and Trustee of the Bright Start College Savings Trust

Proponent's argument: The proponents, led by the Treasurer for the State of Illinois and Trustee of the Bright Start College Savings Trust, along with co-filers Schroder Unit Trusts Limited and Wespeth Funds Trust, request that Meta Platforms disclose voting results by share class, distinguishing between Class A shares (one vote per share) and Class B shares (ten votes per share) starting from the 2026 annual meeting. The proponents argue that given CEO Mark Zuckerberg's near-total control of the Class B shares-granting him 61% of the voting power despite only a 14% economic stake-ordinary shareholders deserve to see how Class A shareholders vote independently. They highlight that, based on previous estimated voting results, a majority of Class A shareholders supported several shareholder proposals and opposed some director nominations, but these preferences were overridden due to Class B voting power. Separate disclosure would improve transparency, help Class A shareholders monitor the company's responsiveness to their concerns, and build trust in corporate governance. The proposal notes that other U.S. companies with multi-class structures have adopted similar practices, and that governance organizations such as the Council of Institutional Investors encourage this disclosure. Given the governance imbalance and the critical importance of shareholder rights, the proponents urge a vote in favor of the resolution to strengthen transparency and accountability at Meta.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. It argues that the company already provides robust disclosures regarding its dual-class structure and security ownership, enabling shareholders to assess the voting power dynamics through publicly available information. Meta asserts that it maintains effective Board oversight regardless of share class, with a substantial majority of independent directors and a robust shareholder engagement program that actively gathers and incorporates feedback from Class A shareholders. The Board emphasizes that all shareholders' interests are taken into account without distinction based on share class. Further, the company contends that disaggregating voting results by class would not provide material additional benefit and is not a standard practice among companies with similar dual-class structures. Meta believes its existing disclosures sufficiently inform shareholders and that the requested additional reporting would be redundant. Consequently, the Board recommends a vote against the proposal, maintaining that the current disclosure approach adequately supports shareholder understanding and the company's governance practices.

PIRC Analysis: Different classes of shares have been created to reflect different objectives and different needs from different shareholders. Disclosing how separate classes of shares voted would give a fairer view of what are the issues of most interests, based on the class of shares. Support is recommended.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Hate Targeting Marginalised Communities

Proponent Shareholder: JLens on behalf of the Leichtag Foundation

Proponent's argument: The proponent, JLens on behalf of the Leichtag Foundation, requests that Meta Platforms prepare a report detailing its policies, practices, and effectiveness in combating hate targeting marginalised communities, specifically antisemitism, anti-LGBTQ+, and anti-disability hate. The proponent stresses that, according to ADL surveys, harassment and hate incidents against these groups have risen sharply, particularly in the wake of global events. Failure to effectively moderate hate content risks driving users away, harming brand trust, and reducing advertiser confidence. The proposal suggests that a detailed report could cover areas such as the integration of expertise on hate moderation, evaluation of advertising policies, enforcement mechanisms, user support services, and data transparency for independent auditing. The proponent cites examples where Meta's platforms allegedly underperformed in hate moderation compared to competitors like YouTube and Twitch, and highlights findings from independent watchdogs showing persistent availability of antisemitic and hate content. A comprehensive report would give shareholders critical insights into how Meta is protecting users, mitigating reputational and regulatory risks, and ensuring the long-term success and competitiveness of its platforms. By strengthening its response to hate, Meta would reinforce user trust and advertiser confidence, both crucial for sustainable shareholder value.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against this proposal. The company states that its Community Standards already prohibit hateful conduct directed at protected characteristics across its platforms, based on input from a wide range of internal and external experts. Meta explains that it enforces these standards actively, prioritising high-severity harms and using a combination of proactive enforcement and user reporting. The company highlights that it regularly publishes a Community Standards Enforcement Report to provide transparency on its efforts. Oversight of content governance, including hate moderation, is provided by the Board's privacy and product compliance committee, which receives regular updates from management. Meta maintains that it has made updates to its enforcement mechanisms to enhance protections and responsiveness to harmful content. Given the company's existing structures, disclosures, and oversight processes, the Board argues that the additional report requested by the shareholder proposal is unnecessary and would not provide meaningful added value to shareholders. Therefore, the Board recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Research has shown that hate speech and harassment targeting marginalised communities have widespread harmful impacts across society, exacerbating discrimination, exclusion, and social instability. Tech companies, have significant power and responsibility in controlling the dissemination of content that promotes hate, violence, or personal harm. Regulatory frameworks around the world are also evolving to impose stricter penalties for failure to curb hate speech and disinformation, exposing companies to potential fines and legal action. A perceived lack of accountability or insufficient action in addressing hate on platforms can severely damage user trust, alienate advertisers, and erode shareholder value over time. Given findings from independent watchdogs indicating ongoing deficiencies in Meta's enforcement and user support mechanisms relative to peers, a comprehensive, transparent report detailing Meta's policies, practices, and effectiveness in combating hate would help address these concerns. Such a report would enable shareholders to assess the company's management of related risks and its commitment to protecting vulnerable communities and maintaining a safe online environment. On this basis, support is recommended.

9.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Child Safety Impacts and Actual Harm Reduction to Children

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Proxy Impact on behalf of the Hyde Cragmont 2015 Trust and the Linda C. Wisniewski Trust

Proponent's argument: The proponents, led by Proxy Impact on behalf of the Hyde Cragmont 2015 Trust and the Linda C. Wisniewski Trust, along with a broad coalition of faith-based investors and institutional shareholders, request that Meta publish a report assessing the company's progress in reducing actual harm to children and improving child safety across its platforms. The proponents emphasize that social media impacts children and teens differently from adults, exposing them to heightened risks such as cyberbullying, sexual exploitation, mental health deterioration, and exposure to harmful content. They cite Meta's own internal research and public controversies, including lawsuits and regulatory actions, to argue that Meta's existing measures are insufficient. Specific concerns include Instagram's negative effects on teen mental health, the proliferation of child sexual abuse material on Meta's platforms, and failures in protecting children's data privacy. While Meta has taken some steps, such as introducing Instagram Teen Accounts and new safety features, the proponents note that there is no publicly available set of company-wide performance targets or metrics to evaluate the effectiveness of these initiatives. They argue that clear, measurable disclosures are critical for investors to assess risk management, regulatory exposure, and reputational impacts. The requested report would provide transparency on harm reduction strategies and allow stakeholders to better evaluate Meta's commitment to protecting its youngest users, thereby safeguarding long-term shareholder value.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. The company asserts that it is strongly committed to fostering a safe online environment for young users and has made substantial investments in developing technologies, tools, and policies aimed at protecting children across its platforms. Meta outlines a three-pronged approach—prevention, control, and response—to child safety, and highlights recent enhancements such as Instagram Teen Accounts, nudity protection features, stricter default settings for teens, and supervision tools for parents. The company collaborates with global safety organizations, supports educational initiatives, and actively works to remove child exploitation content. Meta publishes quantitative data on child safety actions in its Community Standards Enforcement Reports, including metrics on the detection and removal of harmful content. Oversight of child safety efforts is provided by the Board's privacy and product compliance committee. Given the extensive disclosures, ongoing improvements, and integration of child safety into governance structures, the Board argues that the additional report requested by the proponents would be duplicative and unnecessary. Therefore, the Board recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The proponent asks for a report on the risks associated with potential and actual risks for children (personally or mentally). Such risks can have significant reputational and financial consequences for a company and it is in the best interests of shareholders to be informed of the Company's exposure to and management of such risks. While the company indicates that it is committed to internet's governance and to prevent risks to children deriving from it, it does not disclose the risks to which the company might be exposed regarding additional violations of child safety. Ensuring that users, advertisements and products do not cause setbacks to child rights or straightly violate child rights is considered to be due diligence, in order to uphold company's policies on human rights and minimize corresponding risks. As such, a vote for the resolution is recommended.

10.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Risks of Deepfakes in Online Child Exploitation

Proponent Shareholder: Bowyer Research, Inc. on behalf of an anonymous shareholder

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Bowyer Research, Inc. on behalf of a shareholder who wishes to remain anonymous, requests that Meta Platforms prepare a transparency report disclosing the company's use of deepfake detection technology to combat online child exploitation. The resolution stresses that while artificial intelligence offers many benefits, it also presents new risks, particularly the use of AI-generated deepfake content in child sexual abuse and exploitation. The proponent highlights that Meta has acknowledged AI risks in political contexts by labeling AI-generated political content and argues similar attention is urgently needed for child safety risks. Reports from organisations such as Thorn and the NCMEC have found that Meta platforms, particularly Instagram, are top sites for sextortion materials. With the rising use of deepfake technology, there is concern that child exploitation incidents could surge without proactive detection and mitigation measures. The proposal points to recent lawsuits against tech companies over child safety failures, emphasising that inadequate action poses not only moral but also significant legal and reputational risks. The requested report would allow shareholders to assess how Meta is addressing these emerging threats and demonstrate the company's commitment to protecting vulnerable users while mitigating regulatory and financial risks.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. The company asserts that it already prohibits any form of child sexual exploitation content, including AI-generated deepfakes, under its Community Standards. Meta states that it has invested heavily in child safety technologies, working closely with external experts and stakeholders to continuously improve its policies and enforcement. Meta participates in initiatives such as the Thorn and All Tech is Human principles to address AI-generated child sexual abuse material (CSAM) and reports its actions publicly through its Transparency Center and Community Standards Enforcement Reports. The company's approach includes the use of advanced detection tools like the Take It Down initiative, proactive reporting to NCMEC, and a three-pronged child protection strategy: prevent, control, and respond. Oversight of child safety and AI-related risks is provided by the Board's privacy and product compliance committee. Given the company's ongoing efforts, public disclosures, and active collaboration with industry leaders to address AI risks in child exploitation, the Board believes that the additional report requested by the shareholder is unnecessary and would not provide material additional benefit. Therefore, the Board recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Research has shown that harmful online content, including misinformation, hate speech, and now increasingly AI-generated deepfake materials, can have severe societal impacts, with vulnerable groups, including children, facing the gravest risks. The emergence of deepfake technology adds a new layer of complexity to the challenge of safeguarding users, particularly against online child exploitation. There are several ways tech companies can address these risks: investing in tools that can detect deepfake material, reducing incentives for perpetrators to misuse platforms for harmful purposes, and enhancing transparency and accountability regarding the deployment of AI moderation tools. Failure to act effectively exposes companies to regulatory fines, lawsuits, and significant reputational harm, particularly as lawmakers globally are tightening requirements around online safety and content moderation. The perceived lack of robust, proactive action in combatting deepfake-facilitated child exploitation could also result in severe erosion of user trust and advertiser confidence. Given the fast evolving threat landscape, the provision of a transparency report detailing Meta's approach to deepfake detection and mitigation in the context of child exploitation would enable shareholders to better evaluate how the company is managing emerging risks associated with AI technologies. On this basis, support is recommended.

11.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on AI Data Usage Oversight

Proponent Shareholder: National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The National Legal and Policy Center requests that Meta prepare an annual report assessing the risks associated with the real or potential unethical or improper use of external data in developing, training, and deploying its artificial intelligence (AI) systems. The proposal highlights that Meta's AI strategy relies heavily on vast amounts of public and user data and that the company's dominant data position, combined with a history of privacy violations and regulatory fines, raises concerns about future misconduct. The proponent emphasises previous instances where Meta faced significant penalties for breaching data privacy laws, such as the €1.2 billion GDPR fine, and ongoing accusations of over-collection of sensitive user information without adequate consent. It warns that Meta's open-source AI model approach could further exacerbate risks if ethical data sourcing and privacy safeguards are not prioritised. Ethical data usage is seen as critical not only to mitigate legal and reputational risks but also to maintaining consumer trust and safeguarding Meta's market leadership in the competitive AI landscape. The requested report would enable shareholders to better assess how Meta manages these risks and measures the effectiveness of its efforts to ensure ethical AI development.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. The company asserts that protecting privacy is fundamental to its technology development, including AI and generative AI. Meta describes its privacy review process, which assesses risks related to data collection, use, and sharing, and outlines steps to mitigate such risks. Meta states that training data for AI models includes publicly available information, licensed data, and public posts from Meta platforms, with exclusions for sensitive sources. It affirms that it adheres to relevant legal standards, including legitimate interests under GDPR for European users. Meta highlights its participation in industry alliances such as the AI Alliance and the Partnership on AI to promote responsible AI development. The Board further notes that its privacy and product compliance committee oversees data practices related to AI, ensuring governance and risk management. Given these existing efforts, transparency reports, and ongoing collaboration with stakeholders, the Board argues that the requested additional report would not provide significant additional benefit to shareholders and recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: An explicit AI transparency report addressing data usage oversight offers several key benefits beyond existing ad hoc disclosures. It would build trust with users, regulators, and shareholders by clarifying how external and internal data is sourced, processed, and utilised in AI model development, including safeguards against improper or unethical data use. This transparency would foster confidence in Meta's commitment to fair and ethical AI practices, particularly important given the company's history of privacy controversies and regulatory scrutiny. A dedicated report would help identify and mitigate risks related to biases, privacy infringements, and unauthorised use of sensitive information, which could otherwise expose the company to reputational and legal risks. Furthermore, a structured transparency report would allow stakeholders to assess whether AI data practices align with privacy laws, data ethics principles, and broader societal expectations. It would also educate users and investors on how Meta manages AI-related data risks, supporting informed engagement and helping to sustain the company's license to operate in an increasingly regulated environment. On this basis, support is recommended.

12.. Shareholder Resolution: GHG Emissions Reduction Actions

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow on behalf of Myra K. Young and James McRitchie

Proponent's argument: The proponents, As You Sow on behalf of Myra K. Young and James McRitchie, request that Meta disclose a detailed transition plan demonstrating how its expanded data center operations will result in actual greenhouse gas emissions reductions, rather than relying on the purchase of renewable energy certificates (RECs). The resolution emphasizes that Meta's electricity use and overall emissions have doubled since 2019, driven largely by the energy demands of its growing AI infrastructure. Although Meta claims to match its operational electricity consumption with renewable energy, the proponents argue that RECs often fail to add new renewable capacity and therefore do not achieve meaningful decarbonization. Specific concerns are cited, such as Meta's expansion projects in Louisiana and Nebraska, which have led to new fossil fuel investments and delayed coal plant retirements. The proponents highlight the reputational, regulatory, and operational risks Meta faces if it continues to depend on high-carbon energy sources. In contrast, peer companies like Alphabet are committing to 24/7 carbon-free energy procurement. The proponents argue that Meta should prioritize energy strategies that lead to tangible emissions reductions and actively contribute to grid decarbonization. They urge support for the proposal to strengthen Meta's climate resilience and mitigate future regulatory, litigation, and operational risks.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. The company emphasizes that it has matched its operational electricity consumption with 100% clean and renewable energy since 2020 and continues to prioritize adding new renewable projects to the grids where it operates. Meta outlines its longstanding commitment to sustainable data center design, with all facilities achieving gold LEED certification standards and integrating advanced energy efficiency measures. The company states that its renewable energy strategy is based on the principle of additionality, meaning that it partners with developers to add new clean energy projects, not merely purchasing unbundled RECs. Meta reports that less than 5% of its 2023 renewable energy purchases involved short-term unbundled RECs. The Board underscores that Meta's audit and risk oversight committee regularly reviews its net-zero strategy, energy initiatives, and transition risks. Given these ongoing efforts, the Board argues that an additional transition plan is unnecessary and would not provide material added benefit to shareholders. Therefore, it recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Most investors accept the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) recommendations that net emissions of carbon dioxide must be halved by 2030 and reach 'net zero' by 2050 to maintain global warming below 1.5 degrees Celsius. These targets must be fully integrated into corporate business planning and operational decision-making, supported by robust short- and medium-term emissions reduction targets. In the case of Meta, the company's significant expansion of energy-intensive data centers, combined with its growing reliance on renewable energy certificates (RECs) to maintain carbon neutrality claims, raises concerns about the credibility of its decarbonization strategy. Comprehensive and transparent reporting on actual emissions reductions, aligned with real-world grid decarbonization rather than market-based accounting mechanisms alone, is vital for shareholders. Such disclosure would better inform investors of the risks and opportunities facing Meta, the strategies being implemented to mitigate transition and physical climate risks, and the potential impacts of different climate scenarios, including a 1.5 degrees Celsius pathway, on the company's operations, strategy, and financial outlook. Given the intensifying scrutiny around corporate greenwashing and energy sourcing practices, particularly for companies expanding AI infrastructure, clear and credible transition planning is essential. On this basis, support for the resolution is recommended.

13.. Shareholder Resolution: Bitcoin Treasury Assessment

Proponent Shareholder: Ethan Peck on behalf of IP 2006 GRAT Robert Peck Descendants Trust

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Ethan Peck on behalf of the IP 2006 GRAT Robert Peck Descendants Trust, requests that Meta Platforms conduct an assessment of the potential benefits of adding Bitcoin to the company's treasury assets. The proposal argues that a significant portion of Meta's assets are held in cash, cash equivalents, and low-yield bonds, which are vulnerable to inflation and thus erode shareholder value over time. Bitcoin, with its verifiable fixed supply, is presented as a superior, inflation resistant store of value that has dramatically outperformed bonds over the past one- and five-year periods. The proponent notes that prominent figures associated with Meta, such as CEO Mark Zuckerberg and Director Marc Andreessen, have publicly supported Bitcoin, and that major investors like BlackRock recommend modest Bitcoin allocations. Furthermore, with corporate Bitcoin adoption accelerating, the proposal asserts that Meta has an opportunity to lead in forward thinking treasury management. An assessment, even if it results in no action, would demonstrate fiduciary diligence and position Meta as an innovator in financial strategy. Shareholders are encouraged to support the proposal to ensure that all prudent asset management options, including Bitcoin, are properly evaluated.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. The company states that it maintains a comprehensive and prudent treasury management process overseen by the Audit & Risk Oversight Committee. This process involves regularly reviewing a wide range of investable assets and prioritising capital preservation and liquidity to support Meta's ongoing operations, working capital, and capital expenditure needs. Meta emphasises that asset volatility is carefully assessed to ensure financial stability and long-term returns. The company notes that it already considers diversification strategies and a broad array of investment types, and that its processes are designed to evaluate appropriate investment options on an ongoing basis. While acknowledging the broader debate over cryptocurrency investments, the Board believes the requested specific assessment regarding Bitcoin is unnecessary given the company's existing robust review processes. Therefore, the Board recommends shareholders vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The goal of this proposal requesting a full assessment of the potential risks and benefits associated with adding Bitcoin to the company's treasury assets is considered of relevance and importance. Prudent treasury management is critical for protecting shareholder value, particularly in a context where inflation, low bond yields, and emerging alternative assets like Bitcoin are increasingly part of strategic discussions. Although the company outlines that it already has processes in place to evaluate a broad range of investment assets, a specific, transparent assessment of Bitcoin would help shareholders understand the company's risk appetite, diversification strategies, and approach to balancing liquidity, volatility, and long-term value preservation. Given the volatility and regulatory uncertainties surrounding cryptocurrencies, careful examination is necessary to avoid exposing the company to undue financial or reputational risk. At the same time, failure to assess emerging financial strategies could leave the company at a competitive disadvantage if market practices evolve. While the company's response indicates that some work is being done in treasury oversight, more targeted analysis regarding Bitcoin and similar assets could be beneficial. On this basis, the request for an assessment appears reasonable. Support is recommended.

14.. Shareholder Resolution: Data Collection and Advertising Practices

Proponent Shareholder: Tulipshare Capital LLC on behalf of Tulipshare Fund 1 LP

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Tulipshare Capital LLC on behalf of Tulipshare Fund 1 LP, requests that Meta Platforms publish a comprehensive report providing greater transparency regarding its data collection and advertising practices. The resolution notes that while Meta has taken steps to improve privacy controls, significant risks remain, including regulatory fines, litigation, and reputational damage. Studies have found that Meta's apps, including Facebook, Instagram, and Messenger, are among the most invasive in terms of user data collection, tracking 32 types of user information, including sensitive personal data. Despite ongoing investments in privacy, the proponent argues that Meta's current Privacy Policy lacks detailed disclosures regarding the exact nature, extent, and handling of collected data across its platforms, including location, biometric data, cross-platform data integration, and the use of AI in ad targeting. Concerns are raised about the adequacy of informed consent, data retention practices, and users' ability to manage or withdraw consent effectively. Given Meta's history of major privacy breaches and fines, the proponents argue that shareholders would benefit from deeper transparency about Meta's data policies, user consent mechanisms, advertising practices, and the measures taken to safeguard user privacy and minimise regulatory risks. Shareholders are urged to support the proposal to enhance oversight and accountability.

Company's response: The Board of Meta recommends voting against the proposal. The company asserts that it takes privacy seriously and has invested over $8 billion since 2019 to build a rigorous privacy program embedded throughout product development and operations. Meta highlights its governance structures, including oversight by the privacy and product compliance committee and external third-party assessors. The company offers detailed privacy tools and guidance through its Privacy Center, allowing users to control, view, and manage their personal information. Meta's Privacy Policy is designed to be accessible and provides clear explanations and real world examples of how user data is collected, used, and shared. The company regularly publishes updates, such as the annual Privacy Progress Update, which outlines Meta's privacy initiatives, product developments, and risk management strategies. Meta maintains that its disclosures, transparency practices, and user tools are robust and comprehensive. Consequently, the Board believes that the additional report requested by the proposal is unnecessary and would not provide significant additional benefit to shareholders. Therefore, it recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The goal of this proposal a full assessment and enhanced disclosure of the company's data collection, user consent, and advertising practices is considered of high importance. Meta's provision of products that collect, process, and monetize user data presents significant legal, financial, and reputational risks, especially given increasing global regulatory scrutiny and rising public concern over privacy rights. For example, concerns about big data practices have highlighted risks related to user profiling, biased algorithmic outcomes, and infringement on personal privacy an issue that some scholars have recognised as a fundamental human right for the twenty-first century. While Meta's response indicates that significant investments and programs have been developed to improve privacy protections, disclosure remains broad and high level, and more detailed, tangible transparency regarding the nature of data collected, cross platform integration, consent mechanisms, and targeted advertising practices would further strengthen investor confidence and risk oversight. Enhanced reporting would better equip shareholders to assess how Meta is addressing evolving regulatory expectations and societal norms regarding privacy and data ethics. As such, the request for this assessment and improved transparency appears reasonable. Support is recommended.

GE HEALTHCARE TECHNOLOGIES INC AGM - 28-05-2025*4.. Stockholder proposal regarding stockholder ratification of certain termination pay arrangements, if properly presented.*

Proponent Shareholder: Martin Harangozo

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges GE HealthCare to adopt a policy requiring shareholder approval for new or renewed compensation packages that include golden parachute payments exceeding 2.99 times an executive's base salary plus target short-term bonus. This proposal, focused on Named Executive Officers, aims to introduce oversight and ensure that excessive severance arrangements align with shareholder interests. Golden parachutes covered by the proposal include all forms of compensation-cash, equity, perquisites, or benefits-triggered by termination, excluding previously vested benefits. The proposal stipulates that even when limits exist, consequences such as a shareholder vote are essential for accountability. It does not limit overall pay or use of equity compensation, thus maintaining flexibility in executive recruitment. The proponent emphasizes that similar proposals have achieved majority shareholder support at other major corporations, such as FedEx, Spirit AeroSystems, Alaska Air, and Fiserv. By requiring non-binding shareholder votes on unusually large parachutes, the policy promotes transparency and shareholder alignment, without restricting the Board's ability to offer competitive long-term incentives.

Company's response: GE HealthCare's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it is unnecessary given the company's current executive compensation framework. The Board points to its existing cash severance policy, which already triggers a non-binding shareholder vote when cash severance exceeds 2.99 times the sum of base salary and target bonus for Executive Officers. The company argues that its Talent, Culture, and Compensation Committee requires flexibility to design tailored compensation packages that remain competitive globally. The Board also notes strong historical support for its executive pay practices, with over 92% of shareholders approving its say-on-pay proposals in both 2023 and 2024. Furthermore, GE HealthCare believes the proposal's broader scope may create conflicts with its Long-Term Incentive Plan, which includes double-trigger vesting and no excise tax gross-ups, in line with market best practices. The Board maintains that shareholder concerns are already adequately addressed and that adding new restrictions may undermine the Committee's ability to make effective, strategically aligned decisions in a multinational context. It concludes that the proposal is not in the best interest of shareholders.

PIRC analysis: The company's argument of losing competitive advantage by submitting severance to shareholders' approval is not considered to be an effective one: as a matter of fact, ratification of severance agreements or payments is common practice in developed markets overseas (such as France or Italy). On the contrary, this proposal is considered to be an advance in corporate governance, as it will allow to reduce the gap between shareowners and management.

The Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Require More Director Nominations Than Open SeatsProponent Shareholder: Jing Zhao Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Juniper Networks to reform its board election process by allowing shareholders to vote from a slate with more nominees than available board seats. This is proposed as a democratic reform to counter what the proponent describes as an entrenched corporate oligarchy, citing Aristotle's political theory and the Company's 2023 CEO pay ratio of 111:1. The proponent criticizes excessive executive compensation, claiming it is economically unsustainable and socially harmful. Referencing other companies like JPMorgan Chase, Intel, Netflix, and Salesforce where shareholders have opposed high executive pay, the proponent argues that a more democratic board election process would increase accountability. The supporting statement asserts that current board elections lack genuine competition and that diversity and board independence are compromised. The proponent recommends that the Company amend its governing documents to accommodate this reform while preserving compliance with legal and contractual obligations. The proposal is positioned as a corrective mechanism to increase transparency, fairness, and representativeness in board elections by mandating at least one more nominee than the number of open seats.

Company's Response: Juniper Networks' Board unanimously recommends voting against the proposal, asserting it is unnecessary and would disrupt existing governance practices. The Board highlights its robust nominating and evaluation process, designed to ensure that highly qualified and diverse candidates with complementary skills are selected. It contends that the proposal would complicate Board planning, reduce effectiveness, and lead to potential turnover, harming long-term strategy execution. The Board also argues that contested elections may deter qualified individuals from standing for nomination and result in inefficiencies, given the significant resources already dedicated to candidate selection. Furthermore, the Company emphasizes that shareholders already have mechanisms-through proxy access and advance notice provisions-to nominate candidates, including nominating more individuals than available board seats. The current majority voting standard and stockholder engagement practices provide sufficient avenues for influence and feedback. Therefore, the Company concludes that the proposal is redundant, potentially destabilizing, and not in the best interest of shareholders or long-term corporate strategy.

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of board diversity lie in widening the perspectives on business issues brought to bear on decision-making, avoiding too great a similarity of attitude and helping companies understand their customers, marketplace, supply chain and workforces. While it is considered that greater competition may be beneficial, and although there is no guarantee that increasing the number of candidates would make it so better candidates will be proposed to the board, the ownership threshold of at least 3% for at least 3 years to submit director nominees is considered excessive and however limited to up to 20% of the Board. A vote on support is recommended as a way to encourage the board to report on solutions alternative to the current requirements for including shareholders' director nominees in the proxy statement.

ZIMMER BIOMET HOLDINGS INC AGM - 29-05-2025

5.. Amend Articles: Approve an amendment to our Restated Certificate of Incorporation to allow for exculpation of officers as permitted by Delaware law.

It is proposed to approve an amendment to the Restated Certificate of Incorporation. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuade shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

DOLLAR GENERAL CORPORATION AGM - 29-05-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Special Shareholder Meeting Improvement

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: John Chevedden urges Dollar General Corporation to remove the one-year continuous holding requirement for shareholders to be eligible to call a special shareholder meeting. He argues that the current restriction renders the right to request special meetings effectively meaningless, particularly in times of corporate underperformance. He points to Dollar General's stock decline-from $246 in 2022 to $79 in late 2024-as a sign of the need for urgent shareholder mechanisms. Chevedden notes that Tennessee law prohibits action by written consent, further limiting shareholder influence. He asserts that enabling immediate acquisition of sufficient shares to meet the 25% ownership threshold-without a one-year delay-would enhance shareholder responsiveness and improve board accountability. He argues that the prospect of a special meeting could motivate directors to avoid company underperformance, as underperforming directors could be replaced more rapidly. He stresses that meaningful governance rights should not depend on an arbitrary holding period and contends that even new or external shareholders can offer valuable insights and solutions. At minimum, the proposal seeks to expose the severe limitations in the current governance structure that restrict effective shareholder action. He concludes by encouraging shareholders to vote in favor of Proposal 4 to restore meaningful rights in governance oversight.

Company's Response: The Board recommends shareholders vote against Proposal 4, arguing that removing the one-year holding period could lead to misuse of the special meeting process by shareholders with short-term or narrow interests. It emphasises that the 25% threshold and one-year ownership rule were approved by over 98% of shareholders in 2021, reflecting broad support for this balanced governance framework. The Company notes that a similar proposal was rejected by 87% of shareholders in 2023. The Board asserts that special meetings require substantial time and financial resources, which could detract from strategic management and long-term value creation if triggered too frequently. It references SEC Rule 14a-8, which also requires a one-year holding period for submitting proposals, as evidence that such standards are appropriate to ensure proposers have a meaningful economic stake. Furthermore, the Company outlines its robust corporate governance practices, including proxy access, no supermajority voting, annual director elections, and direct communication channels with the Board. It highlights its active shareholder engagement, including outreach to shareholders representing 66% of shares outstanding in 2024, none of whom raised this issue. The Board concludes that the current structure balances shareholder rights with stability, and warns that removing the holding period would expose the Company to unnecessary and potentially disruptive shareholder actions.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. It is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Adopt a Comprehensive Human Rights Policy

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Mercy Investment Services, Inc.

Proponent's argument: A coalition led by Mercy Investment Services urges Dollar General to adopt and publicly disclose a comprehensive Human Rights Policy aligned with international standards, including the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. The proposal highlights that Dollar General currently lacks such a policy across its own operations and broader value chain. It cites labor rights concerns, such as the National Labor Relations Board's 2023 ruling that the company engaged in serious unfair labor practices, including the unlawful termination and intimidation of workers organising in Connecticut. Additional cases are pending in several states. The company has also been designated a "Severe Violator" by OSHA due to repeated and serious safety violations, and workplace violence including 80 shootings resulting in 41 deaths between 2022 and 2024 further threatens worker safety. The proponents also flag low pay as a human rights issue, with 92% of Dollar General workers earning under $15 per hour and a CEO pay ratio of 521:1. They argue that these issues pose reputational, financial, legal, and regulatory risks to the company. While acknowledging Dollar General issued a safety report in 2024, they claim the process lacked adequate stakeholder engagement. The proposal concludes that adopting a strong, transparent Human Rights Policy is essential for protecting stakeholders and promoting long-term shareholder value.

Company's Response: The Board opposes Proposal 5, arguing it is redundant and unnecessary because the company already has comprehensive human rights policies and procedures in place. Dollar General points to its publicly available Human Rights Policy and Code of Business Conduct and Ethics, which apply across operations and suppliers, prohibit forced or child labor, and promote safe and equitable workplace conditions. The Company describes its supplier audit program, which includes regular third-party inspections and corrective action plans for non-compliance, and outlines its internal grievance mechanisms, including a 24/7 anonymous hotline. Dollar General highlights its "Serving Others" report, aligned with the UN Sustainable Development Goals, and its proactive monitoring and adjustment of human rights practices. In 2023, the company also commissioned an independent third-party audit on workplace safety, which validated its policies and found that most issues cited in government inspections were being addressed. Enhancements were made in 2024 to reinforce compliance and employee engagement. The Board concludes that the company's current frameworks already address the substance of the proposal and that an additional policy would be duplicative and not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: The proposal calls for Dollar General to adopt and disclose a comprehensive Human Rights Policy aligned with international human rights standards, citing existing risks related to labor practices, workplace safety, and compensation. The proponent coalition references a number of publicly documented incidents, including National Labor Relations Board rulings and OSHA designations, as evidence of the potential gap between company policies and outcomes in practice. The proposal highlights a lack of a consolidated policy covering the company's own operations, distinguishing this from peers who have disclosed broader commitments. The request does not focus on geopolitical criteria or advocate for withdrawal from specific markets but instead centers on operational alignment with global human rights expectations and frameworks. While the company argues that its current disclosures and procedures already address these concerns, the resolution suggests that a clearer, standalone policy would improve transparency and risk oversight. From a shareholder perspective, such a policy could support long-term value by mitigating reputational, regulatory, and operational risks, although its necessity may depend on the effectiveness and completeness of existing practices. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Food Waste Transparency Report

Proponent Shareholder: The Accountability Board, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The Accountability Board requests that Dollar General publish a food waste transparency report detailing the types and quantities of food and beverages in its waste streams, disposal methods, and time-bound, measurable reduction targets. The proponent emphasises that food waste reduction aligns with both environmental and financial priorities, referencing institutional investors and global research highlighting the financial return on investment from such efforts. The proposal critiques Dollar General's current ESG disclosures as partial and inconsistent, noting they reference waste reduction in a subset of stores and limited categories like expired dairy, but lack full accounting across the company's 16,000+ stores. With plans to expand fresh produce to 10,000 stores, the proponent argues that transparency on food waste becomes increasingly important. It urges comprehensive disclosure not only to strengthen oversight but also to ensure alignment with emerging regulatory expectations and stakeholder scrutiny. The proposal stresses that the environmental and operational benefits of food waste reduction-such as lower greenhouse gas emissions and resource savings-make such reporting both material and in the long-term interest of shareholders and the company.

Company's Response: The Board opposes Proposal 6, arguing that the requested food waste transparency report would not offer value proportionate to the resources required for its preparation. Dollar General maintains that its sustainability priorities-outlined in the "Serving Others" report-already include robust waste reduction and recycling efforts focused on plastic, cardboard, paper, and pallets, delivering measurable environmental returns. While food waste is a relatively minor part of Dollar General's operations due to its limited perishable inventory, the company notes it already donates surplus food, composts organic waste in select locations, and repurposes expired dairy. It also partners with Feeding America to support food access and reduce waste. The Board states that given the company's scale and focus, current disclosures are adequate and appropriate. It adds that most of the company's SKUs are non-perishable, unlike typical grocery or foodservice retailers. Preparing a separate, comprehensive food waste report would divert management time and incur unnecessary costs without delivering material benefit. Therefore, the Board concludes that further reporting is unwarranted and not in the best interest of shareholders.

PIRC analysis: While the company's response to the shareholder proposal contains an impressive array of statistics on efforts to combat food waste through a variety of initiatives, this amount of data and information is not available on the company's sustainability website. The proponent is not requesting that the company initiate programmes to mitigate food waste, it is asking that the company report fully on those efforts. Since the depth of information available is more complete in the Company's response, and likely to be yet more comprehensive were the Company to dedicate a complete report to the programmes on its sustainability website, it would appear to be in the Company's best interests to prepare the kind of report called for in the proposal. Support for the resolution is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Employee Access to Timely, Quality Healthcare

Proponent Shareholder: As You Sow, on behalf of Longview LargeCap 500 Index Fund

Proponent's argument: The proposal, submitted by As You Sow on behalf of Longview LargeCap 500 Index Fund, requests that Dollar General publish a public report assessing employee access to timely, quality healthcare and describing strategies to address any insufficiencies identified. The proponent argues that employee health and productivity are closely linked, and insufficient healthcare access may impact operational efficiency and talent retention, particularly as Dollar General expands its service offerings. The proposal highlights that 66% of the company's workforce is female and that Dollar General operates primarily in states where abortion access is restricted, potentially affecting broader access to care. The proposal cites data showing reduced availability of medical professionals, especially OB-GYNs, in such states, which could compound challenges in workforce recruitment and retention. It calls for the company to go beyond legal compliance by monitoring healthcare access issues and employee perceptions, particularly in underserved geographies. By proactively identifying and addressing healthcare access gaps, the proponent contends that the company can mitigate reputational and operational risks, align with evolving expectations around human capital management, and support long-term shareholder value.

Company's Response: The Board recommends shareholders vote against Proposal 7, arguing that it is unnecessary, overly broad, and would impose burdens without adding material value. Dollar General emphasises its investment in a wide range of competitive health and wellness benefits, including medical, prescription, telehealth, counseling, and wellness programs. The company maintains that it routinely evaluates and adjusts its offerings to remain competitive and responsive to employee needs. It further highlights extensive employee feedback channels, such as town halls, surveys, and anonymous reporting that are already used to monitor employee well-being. The Board argues that the report sought by the proposal would divert resources from core benefit provision, and overlap with existing oversight by the Board's CHCM Committee, which reviews human capital strategy, compensation, and benefits. Additionally, the company notes that certain aspects of the proposal pertain to broader public healthcare issues beyond its operational control. As such, the Board believes current mechanisms are sufficient, and that the requested report would not be a cost effective use of resources or materially improve shareholder or employee outcomes.

PIRC analysis: This proposal requests a report evaluating employees' access to timely, quality healthcare and how the company may address any identified gaps. It emphasises the potential operational risks of limited healthcare access, including impacts on recruitment, retention, and workforce productivity, particularly in states with healthcare access restrictions. The company outlines its existing benefits programs and feedback mechanisms, and argues the report would be redundant and not a good use of resources. However, the resolution does not challenge existing coverage but calls for a structured assessment of access outcomes. Given the company's broad geographic footprint and growing scrutiny of human capital risks, the proposal may support long-term shareholder interests by encouraging proactive risk management and greater transparency. Support is recommended.

Proponent's argument John Chevedden urges the Company to require a shareholder vote on any senior executive severance or termination package exceeding 2.99 times base salary plus target short-term bonus. This applies to Named Executive Officers, and the Company may choose to apply it more broadly. Covered payments include cash, equity, and other compensation triggered by termination, excluding standard pensions or deferred pay. The estimated total value covers lump sums, tax offsets, benefits, accelerated equity, and other perks. The proposal is designed to enhance accountability and prevent excessive "golden parachutes," particularly where non-cash components escape scrutiny. Chevedden emphasizes this is a non-binding vote, has no impact on long-term pay or recruitment, and complements existing pay oversight. He cites 51–65% support for similar proposals at major companies including FedEx and AbbVie. He compares the policy to a speed limit-adding consequences if breached, not restricting movement-and asserts it fills a gap left by the general Say-on-Pay vote, which doesn't isolate golden parachutes for review.

Company's response The Board recommends voting against the proposal, arguing it is unnecessary due to existing safeguards. The Company already limits cash severance to 2.99x salary and bonus, and equity acceleration is only allowed in cases of death, disability, or double-trigger terminations. These practices are documented in the Governance Principles and approved by shareholders under the 2020 Stock Incentive Plan. Severance packages for executives are modest and align with or exceed market standards. The Board stresses that shareholders already vote on key compensation issues through Say-on-Pay, equity plan approvals, and change-of-control golden parachute disclosures as required by SEC and NYSE rules. They argue this proposal is redundant, adds unnecessary burden, and hasn't been adopted by peers. Shareholder feedback has not indicated support for such a policy. The Board concludes that the proposal does not enhance governance and advises a vote against.

PIRC analysis: This resolution is a reasonable measure to improve shareholder oversight of potentially excessive severance arrangements. Although the company claims to cap cash severance and limit equity acceleration, the proposal addresses the broader total value of golden parachutes-including non-cash elements often excluded from internal thresholds. By introducing a non-binding shareholder vote when severance exceeds a defined threshold, the proposal strengthens transparency and accountability without restricting compensation design or flexibility. It complements, rather than duplicates, Say-on-Pay by isolating a controversial pay component. PIRC views the additional scrutiny as a governance enhancement aligned with shareholder interests.

Non-Executive Director, Chair of the Compensation Committee, member of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee. Not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. In terms of best practice, it is considered that both of these committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members. It is considered that the Chair of the Compensation Committee is responsible for the company's executive compensation, and there are concerns with the company's executive compensation. Furthermore, the director also received significant opposition of more than 10% of the votes cast, and the company has not disclosed the steps taken to address discontent with shareholders.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. 4.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: Mr. John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Mr. John Chevedden, requests that Booking Holdings Inc. amend its governance documents to allow shareholders holding at least 10% of outstanding common stock or the minimum permitted under state law to call a special shareholder meeting, including the option to hold such meetings online. He argues that enhancing this right is necessary to improve meaningful shareholder engagement and ensure management accountability, particularly when shareholders require a "Plan B" in response to governance inaction. The current 25% threshold is portrayed as restrictive, especially since the company does not permit action by written consent although the company disputes this claim. The proposal notes that this initiative received 49% shareholder support at the 2022 annual meeting, despite the company campaigning heavily against it. Additionally, similar proposals in 2020 also garnered 49% support. The proposal highlights that many companies with a 25% threshold also allow action by written consent, adding that BKNG's refusal to implement these governance reforms indicates a pattern of ignoring near majority shareholder support. It concludes by urging shareholders to vote in favor to promote fairer shareholder rights and improve board responsiveness.

Company's Response: The Board of Directors recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that the current 25% ownership threshold for calling a special meeting appropriately balances shareholder rights with corporate efficiency. They state that reducing the threshold to 10% could allow a small number of shareholders to pursue self-interested agendas, resulting in the diversion of significant company resources and management attention from core business operations. The Board emphasises that preparation for such meetings is resource intensive and should be reserved for matters of critical urgency supported by a substantial portion of shareholders. They further note that the existing threshold was established after thorough shareholder engagement and reflects prevailing S&P 500 corporate governance practices. The proposal is characterised as repetitive, having been rejected four times previously. The company disputes the proponent's claim regarding shareholder rights by clarifying that shareholders have had the right to act by written consent since 2021. The response argues that BKNG has demonstrated responsiveness through earlier governance reforms and maintains a robust shareholder engagement process. Therefore, the Board asserts that the proposed change is unwarranted and not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the proponent is considered more adequate than the company's current 25% threshold. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: special shareholder meeting improvement

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Cognizant Technology Solutions to enhance shareholder rights by eliminating the one-year continuous ownership requirement for shareholders seeking to call a special meeting. As it stands, shareholders must hold at least 10% of outstanding shares continuously for one year to exercise this right, which the proponent argues renders the right functionally useless. The proposal emphasizes that this restriction prevents timely shareholder action, particularly in scenarios where the company's stock underperforms-as seen in Cognizant's long-term slump, with its stock virtually stagnant since 2018. The ability to swiftly acquire enough shares to call a meeting would empower shareholders to respond to poor performance, provide accountability, and pressure management constructively. The current rule excludes recently acquired shares from eligibility, which significantly limits the utility of the special meeting right. The proposal asserts that an effective mechanism for shareholder-initiated meetings would serve as a necessary counterbalance to unresponsive governance and incentivize directors to perform, knowing that they could face removal via a special meeting. This would foster stronger engagement and offer a credible mechanism for swift intervention when the Board underperforms or ignores shareholder concerns. Ultimately, the proposal seeks to make the special meeting right meaningful and accessible.

Company's Response : Cognizant opposes the proposal, asserting that the existing framework strikes the right balance between empowering shareholders and protecting corporate resources. The company allows shareholders holding 10% of stock for at least one year to call special meetings, which it views as a robust mechanism to address urgent issues. Removing the one-year requirement could open the door to abuse by short-term activist investors with narrow agendas not aligned with long-term value creation. Cognizant stresses that special meetings entail significant resource demands and could disrupt operations. The company warns that activists with only brief ownership could call meetings to advance their interests, creating frequent, costly distractions from strategic goals. Moreover, similar proposals have previously received minimal shareholder support. Cognizant also points to its robust governance framework, including annual director elections, a majority-independent board led by an independent Chair, proxy access for long-term shareholders, and proactive investor outreach. In 2024, feedback from shareholders representing 46% of shares raised no concerns about the special meeting rule. Cognizant argues that its governance structure and engagement practices already allow shareholders to influence policy and hold leadership accountable. Thus, the Board views the proposal as unnecessary and potentially harmful to the broader shareholder base, and urges a vote against it.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold adopted by the company, which is welcomed. However it is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Special Shareholder Meeting Improvement

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Fortive Corporation to improve shareholder rights by lowering the ownership threshold required to call a special shareholder meeting from 25% to 10% of outstanding shares, or the lowest threshold permitted by state law. The proposal argues that the current 25% requirement is excessive and effectively limits meaningful shareholder engagement, especially given the absence of the right to act by written consent. It emphasizes that requiring $6 billion in share ownership to call a special meeting is an unreasonable barrier for most investors and dampens accountability. The proposal references Fortive's stagnant stock price since 2019 as a justification for stronger shareholder tools. It also notes that many companies with a 25% threshold complement it with additional shareholder rights, which Fortive does not. With the prevalence of virtual meetings, logistical challenges have been minimized, further justifying the change. The proponent contends that an improved right to call special meetings is an essential governance reform that offers a credible "Plan B" for shareholder engagement and promotes greater responsiveness from the board and management.

Company's Response : The Company opposes the proposal, maintaining that the existing 25% ownership threshold for calling a special meeting effectively balances shareholder rights with safeguards against potential misuse by short-term interests. Fortive warns that lowering the threshold to 10% could lead to costly and disruptive special meetings driven by minority interests, undermining broader shareholder value. The Board notes that organizing special meetings incurs legal, administrative, and operational costs and distracts leadership from long-term strategy. The current threshold aligns with the practices of many S&P 500 companies and two-thirds of Fortive's proxy peers, reinforcing its appropriateness. Fortive asserts it provides meaningful shareholder engagement avenues, including outreach to investors representing 65% of outstanding shares and governance mechanisms such as proxy access, annual elections, and an independent Board Chair. The company argues that existing governance structures adequately protect shareholder interests without the risks posed by lowering the special meeting threshold. The Board therefore recommends voting against the proposal, asserting it offers no meaningful engagement improvement while potentially increasing corporate inefficiencies.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the Proponent is considered acceptable. Support is recommended.

4. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Devon Energy remove the one-year continuous ownership requirement for shareholders to be eligible to call a special shareholder meeting. Currently, Devon requires shareholders to hold shares continuously for one year to qualify for this right, which the proponent argues renders the provision ineffective, especially in situations where an immediate response to a stock slump is necessary. The proposal highlights that Devon's stock has underperformed significantly, dropping from $68 in 2014 to $35 in late 2024, suggesting an urgent need for mechanisms enabling swift shareholder action. The one-year holding condition prevents potential investors or existing shareholders from mobilising quickly to influence corporate direction or demand accountability. The proponent argues that allowing newly acquired shares to count towards the 25% ownership threshold needed to call a special meeting would enhance board responsiveness, provide better oversight, and serve as a deterrent to poor governance. By removing this restriction, the proposal aims to restore meaningful shareholder rights, enabling them to address urgent concerns without unnecessary delay and offering a practical check on entrenched board members during periods of poor performance.

Company's Response: The Company opposes the proposal, asserting that the current rule allowing special meetings only for shareholders with a one-year continuous holding period appropriately balances shareholder rights and corporate stability. Devon contends that eliminating the holding requirement would expose the Company to the risk of short-term or narrowly focused interests disrupting operations through special meetings. These meetings are costly, time consuming, and divert management's attention from long-term value creation. The Company emphasises that the one-year requirement aligns with SEC Rule 14a-8, which governs eligibility to submit shareholder proposals, indicating a precedent for such a timeframe to establish meaningful investment. Devon points out that a similar proposal to amend the ownership threshold for calling special meetings was rejected by a significant margin in 2023, with only 36% support and no concerns raised over the holding period. The Company claims it already maintains comprehensive shareholder engagement and governance practices, such as annual board elections, majority voting, proxy access, and independent oversight. Devon concludes that its governance framework already enables shareholder input while protecting against the misuse of rights, and that this proposal would undermine that balance without delivering proportional benefits to all shareholders.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. It is recommended to support this proposal as it adds the removal of any provision that disqualifies any company shares owned for less than one unbroken year from calling for a special shareholder meeting, which is considered to be encouraging for active shareholders.

4.. Approve Amended 2020 Equity and Incentive Plan

The Board seeks approval to add 18 million additional shares of common stock for equity awards under the 2020 Equity and Incentive Compensation Plan. The Amended Plan does not provide for any minimum vesting periods and the CEO and other executives will be awarded options or rights to receive shares. At this time, it seems that this plan will not be based on any performance criteria but only on the beneficiaries continued employment. As a result, they may receive bonuses unrelated to their performance or even the performance of the Company as a whole, which is considered a serious frustration of shareholder accountability. Opposition is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Vote Counting Standard

Proponent Shareholder: Connecticut Retirement Plans and Trust Funds

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Airbnb, Inc. begin disclosing voting results by class of shares starting with the 2026 annual meeting. The Company currently employs a multi-class share structure, granting Class B shares 20 votes per share, while Class A shares have one vote per share and Classes C and H have no voting rights. Voting outcomes are presently reported in aggregate, without distinguishing between share classes. The proposal argues that such aggregated reporting obscures whether the will of Class A shareholders-typically more dispersed and independent-is aligned or overridden by the concentrated voting power of Class B shareholders, predominantly held by founders bound by a Voting Agreement. This agreement ensures the re-election of each founder to the board, thus entrenching their influence. The proponent asserts that disaggregating vote results would increase transparency, enable greater accountability to public shareholders, and promote sound governance practices. They note that some U.S. companies already voluntarily disclose voting results by class. The proposal emphasises that this change would not be burdensome to implement but would provide meaningful insight for shareholders, particularly when voting outcomes do not reflect the preferences of the broader investor base.

Company's Response: The Company opposes the proposal, stating it is unnecessary and not in shareholders' best interests. Airbnb asserts that all shareholders knowingly invested under the current multi-class structure, established at the IPO in 2020. The Company already discloses its capital structure-including vote allocations by class and the ownership of significant Class B shares-via SEC filings. Airbnb's founders, who hold a majority of voting power through Class B shares, are bound by a Voting Agreement, ensuring their continued board presence. The board argues that existing disclosures provide sufficient transparency for shareholders to assess voting outcomes and that introducing class-based vote result reporting would add complexity without meaningful benefit. Furthermore, the board highlights Airbnb's robust governance practices, including a majority-independent board and fully independent key committees. It claims these practices already support accountability to all shareholders. Given that vote result breakdown by class is not standard among companies with similar capital structures, the board concludes that the proposal would introduce unnecessary reporting burden and urges shareholders to vote against it.

PIRC Analysis: Different classes of shares have been created to reflect different objectives and different needs from different shareholders. Disclosing how separate classes of shares voted would give a fairer view of what are the issues of most interests, based on the class of shares. Support is recommended.

4.. Amend Articles: Liability of Officers

It is proposed that the Restated Certificate of Incorporation of Juniper, is amended, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding officer exculpation. The Board seeks authority to amend the articles, to reflect new Delaware law provisions regarding the exculpation of officers. Article VII of the Company's Certificate of Incorporation (Certificate) currently provides for the Company to limit the monetary liability of directors in certain circumstances pursuant to and consistent with the Delaware General Corporation Law (DGCL). The State of Delaware recently amended Section 102(b)(7) of the DGCL to allow Delaware corporations to extend similar protections to officers. Specifically, the amendments to the DGCL allow Delaware corporations to exculpate their officers for personal liability for breaches of the duty of care in certain circumstances.

While efforts to align executive and non-executive liabilities and harmonize corporate articles are acknowledged, decisions taken by executives, may cause significant higher losses compared to those taken by directors. While officers remain liable for lack of fiduciary duty due to wrongful actions committed wilfully, they would nevertheless be exculpated against direct actions, such as class actions. Shareholders could still act via derivative lawsuits, which are however more complex and less lucrative legal avenue since shareholders would bring an action in the name of the corporation and not in the name of shareholders. This could potentially dissuading shareholders from pursuing actions and entrench poorly performing officers. On balance, opposition is recommended.

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 15%, in case of exceptional demand.

A green shoe authorisation enables an authorization of additional shares in the event of exceptional public demand. In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 15% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Charitable Giving

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The National Center for Public Policy Research, on behalf of the Free Enterprise Project, calls on PayPal to publish a report analysing how its charitable donations may contribute to discrimination based on speech or religious beliefs. The proponent argues that companies, including PayPal, support nonprofit organisations-such as the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) and Human Rights Campaign (HRC)-that actively influence public policy in ways that may suppress free speech and religious freedom. It claims PayPal has aligned with such groups by relying on them to enforce acceptable use policies that allegedly discriminate against mainstream conservative and religious viewpoints. The proposal highlights that PayPal's listing as a "Silver Partner" to HRC and its inclusion among the

"Equality 100 Award" recipients suggests complicity in a broader ideological agenda. The proponent cites other companies that have reconsidered similar affiliations, urging PayPal to follow suit. It concludes by asserting that shareholders deserve clarity and accountability regarding how PayPal's charitable efforts may expose the company to reputational, operational, or ideological risks and conflicts, especially where alleged bias or censorship is perceived.

Company's response: PayPal's Board urges shareholders to vote against the proposal, arguing that it is redundant and misaligned with the company's values and operational governance. The company asserts that its charitable giving is conducted without regard to political or religious viewpoints and is overseen by a robust governance framework. Donations facilitated through platforms such as the PayPal Giving Fund (PPGF), corporate products like Venmo, and matched employee contributions are directed to qualified organisations that adhere to anti-discrimination standards. The company states that all donations are vetted by cross-functional teams to ensure alignment with compliance standards and corporate ethics policies. PayPal emphasises that charitable activity strengthens customer engagement, brand value, and employee community involvement. The Board further argues that the requested report would divert resources and undermine the existing framework of transparency and annual disclosure, such as in the Global Impact Report. It contends that the proposal misrepresents the nature and intent of PayPal's charitable engagements, and that the company already discloses sufficient detail on charitable giving practices. As such, PayPal concludes the requested analysis is unwarranted and not in the best interests of shareholders.

PIRC analysis: Disclosure of approved charities enables shareholders to assess diversity in alignment with long-term company interests. However, this resolution centers on ideological diversity, seeking explicit inclusion of certain political or religious views. The proponent's concerns are based on contested assumptions about specific organisations and imply that all viewpoints must be equally represented in charitable giving. This misunderstands the role of corporate philanthropy, which is governed by clear, non-discriminatory criteria. Given the broad range of existing donation options and established oversight mechanisms, a vote against the resolution is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that PayPal amend its governing documents to reduce the ownership threshold required to call a special shareholder meeting from 20% to 10% of outstanding common stock. This change is proposed to counterbalance the absence of a shareholder right to act by written consent, which exists at many other companies. The proponent argues that while the right to call special meetings is seldom exercised, its existence acts as a vital accountability mechanism in cases where management resists shareholder engagement. The proposal references historical support of 47% at a prior annual meeting and ties the issue to PayPal's perceived underperformance, highlighting a significant decline in stock price from $288 in 2021 to $86 in late 2024. The proponent also contends that the current 20% threshold is excessively high and may deter new investors from building a stake significant enough to trigger a special meeting. With virtual meetings now standard practice, logistical objections to holding special meetings have diminished. Thus, the resolution aims to enhance shareholder influence and strategic flexibility at a time when the company is seen to be in need of a turnaround.

Company's response: PayPal's Board recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that the current 20% threshold is appropriate and aligns with market standards. The company states that its existing special meeting rights offer stockholders a meaningful mechanism to raise urgent issues without inviting unnecessary disruption. Reducing the threshold to 10% could allow a small minority to advance interests not aligned with the broader shareholder base, risking frequent or frivolous use of special meetings. The Board highlights that special meetings demand significant resources, legal costs, and management time, which may detract from strategic execution. Furthermore, PayPal emphasises its robust governance structure and active engagement with shareholders, noting that investors holding 62% of institutional shares were contacted in 2024, with no feedback suggesting dissatisfaction with the current threshold. The Board also states that PayPal's 20% threshold is consistent with, or more favorable than, 70% of S&P 500 companies. In sum, the proposal is deemed unnecessary and counterproductive, with the Board asserting that existing practices strike the right balance between shareholder rights and effective corporate governance.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the proponent is considered more adequate than the company-proposed 20%. Support is recommended.

1.03. Elect Peter Thiel - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board. The Chair is not considered to be independent as he is one of the Company's co-founders and has also served for a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Furthermore, the Chair of the Sustainability Committee is not up for election, the Chair of the Board is considered accountable for the Company's sustainability programme. The company's sustainability policies and practice are not considered to be adequate in order to minimize material risks linked to sustainability. The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board. Opposition is therefore recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Climate Transition Plan

Proponent Shareholder: Episcopal City Mission, represented by Trillium Asset Management.

Proponent's argument: The proponent, Episcopal City Mission, urges Netflix to issue a climate transition plan that goes beyond its existing sustainability disclosures. While Netflix has set near term science based targets to reduce absolute operational emissions by 46% and value chain emissions intensity by 55% by 2030, the proponent asserts that the company lacks a comprehensive roadmap to achieve these goals. A climate transition plan would provide forward looking strategies, milestones, and KPIs, addressing decarbonisation, policy advocacy, and a just transition. The proposal highlights that Netflix's current disclosures focus on past accomplishments rather than detailing future strategies. Despite referencing actions such as energy efficiency, electrification, and cloud partnerships, the company's approach lacks depth compared to peers with more complex operations. The proponent emphasises that transition planning is a growing investor expectation, with thousands of companies disclosing or planning to develop 1.5°C-aligned transition plans. Accordingly, the proposal seeks a publicly available, annually updated transition plan that provides credible forward-looking disclosure in line with best practice frameworks such as the TPT, TCFD, CDP, and Climate Action 100+.

Company's Response: Netflix opposes the proposal, arguing that it is unnecessary given the company's existing climate disclosures. The company states it has already set and published near term science based GHG emission reduction targets and an overview of its strategy to meet them. These disclosures are updated annually and include projections, reduction levers, and treatment of Scope 3 emissions. Netflix's sustainability reporting is aligned with recognised frameworks such as SASB, GRI, and TCFD. The company further argues that current global reporting standards for climate transition plans are inconsistent and rapidly evolving, citing regulatory developments such as the EU's CSRD and CSDDD. Netflix asserts that it is closely monitoring these frameworks and will comply with any mandatory requirements when they come into effect. Until then, it maintains that its existing disclosures are adequate and that issuing a separate climate transition plan would be premature. As a result, the Board unanimously recommends shareholders vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The proponent is seeking additional disclosure on how Netflix plans to align its operations and value chain emissions with its science based targets, in line with the objectives of the Paris Agreement. Forward looking climate disclosures are in shareholders' interests, providing insight into risks, opportunities, and the Company's strategic response under scenarios such as 1.5 degrees Celsius. While Netflix reports on sustainability, a comprehensive transition plan would improve transparency and accountability, helping shareholders assess whether the Company is on track to meet its goals. Enhanced disclosure would support more informed investment decisions and reinforce Board oversight of climate related risks.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Netflix amend its governing documents to allow shareholders holding 15% of outstanding common stock to call a special shareholder meeting. The current threshold is set at 20% of stock held continuously for at least one year, which the proponent argues effectively excludes shares not meeting this duration requirement. By comparison, more than 100 companies permit shareholders holding 25% of stock to call a special meeting without such restrictions. The proposal argues that a lower threshold would bring Netflix in line with common practice and increase shareholder influence, particularly in cases where directorial performance is in question. The proponent points to past shareholder dissatisfaction, including one director who received 78 million against votes and has served for 23 years. The ability to call a special meeting is framed as a rarely used but essential fallback for shareholders if management is unresponsive. The proponent also cites technological ease of hosting online meetings and notes that the proposal previously received 45% support from shareholders at the 2024 annual meeting. Therefore, it argues, the bylaw should be updated to reflect a fairer and more practical threshold that better supports shareholder rights.

Company's Response: Netflix opposes the proposal, asserting that the existing 20% ownership threshold with a one-year holding requirement is appropriate and was approved by 99.6% of votes at the 2022 annual meeting. The company argues that this framework balances shareholder rights with the need to avoid the operational disruption and costs associated with special meetings. Netflix emphasises that this proposal has already been rejected by shareholders in 2023 and 2024. The Board maintains that the current requirement ensures only shareholders with significant and sustained interest can trigger such meetings, minimising the risk of misuse by short-term or special interest groups. Netflix also cites market benchmarks, noting that many S&P 500 companies either require higher thresholds or do not permit special meetings at all. The company adds that it actively engages with shareholders through regular meetings and dialogue, negating the need for a lower threshold. In light of this, the Board believes no further changes are warranted and recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the proponent is considered more adequate than the company-proposed 20%. Support is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Code of Ethics

Proponent Shareholder: The Mount St. Scholastica - Benedictine Sisters

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Netflix to amend its Code of Ethics by enhancing the section on "Inclusive & Respectful Work Environment" to include more detailed language on non-discrimination, anti-harassment, and whistleblower protections. The proposal highlights several gaps in the current Code following its 2023 update and recommends aligning it more closely with best practices. Suggested enhancements include clearly specifying protected characteristics across all employment dimensions, offering concrete examples of harassment, and outlining protections against retaliation for whistleblowers. The proponent notes that although Netflix is recognised for promoting diversity in content, there is a noticeable disparity at the leadership level, with women comprising only 31% of the board despite accounting for over half of the workforce. Strengthening the Code of Ethics is framed as essential for reinforcing Netflix's commitment to diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI), mitigating reputational risk, and helping attract and retain diverse talent. The proposal suggests that enhanced policy clarity would foster a more accountable and inclusive work culture, aligning internal governance with the company's public DEI values and external leadership in media representation.

Company's Response: Netflix opposes the proposal, stating that its existing Code of Ethics already addresses the areas highlighted by the proponent. The Code, revised in 2023, includes strong language prohibiting discrimination and harassment and offers whistleblower protections. It explicitly states zero tolerance for discrimination and retaliation and applies to directors, officers, and employees. Netflix also has mechanisms in place for reporting misconduct, including a third-party confidential system available to staff, vendors, and talent. All concerns are tracked to resolution. Additionally, Netflix emphasises its broader efforts to foster an inclusive culture, including annual publication of workforce representation data and regular pay equity analyses to identify and correct any disparities based on gender or race. The company believes its current practices adequately reflect its values and commitments. Therefore, the Board sees no need for the proposed amendments and unanimously recommends voting against the resolution.

PIRC analysis: The company claims to have addressed elements of the proposal in its existing Code of Ethics and related practices. However, it does not directly respond to the specific concerns raised by the proponent, nor does it provide a compelling argument for why more detailed amendments would be unnecessary or detrimental. Non-discrimination, anti-harassment, and whistleblower protection are fundamental components of an ethical and inclusive workplace. A Code of Ethics grounded in these principles should clearly reflect them. While direct enforcement of such policies by the Board may not fall strictly within its remit, a board's composition and nomination practices should demonstrate alignment with these values. Directors should not only endorse but also exemplify a culture based on inclusion, respect, and accountability, as embodied in a robust and clearly articulated Code of Ethics.

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Netflix conduct an evaluation and publish a report assessing the legal and financial risks of its affirmative action initiatives, specifically concerning actual or perceived discrimination based on protected characteristics under civil rights law. The resolution cites recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings and other legal cases that have challenged or overturned race-based policies, suggesting that similar programs in corporate environments, such as those practiced by Netflix, could expose the company to significant litigation and reputational risks. Examples provided include Netflix's investments in Black-owned banks, businesses, and creators, as well as supplier diversity and creative equity funds. The proponent argues that these initiatives may now constitute unlawful discrimination in light of evolving judicial interpretation. The proposal contends that Netflix's sizeable workforce and broad stakeholder base increases its vulnerability to lawsuits, which-even if only partially successful-could lead to financial liabilities in the billions. Therefore, the proposal advocates for a formal risk assessment report to protect shareholder interests.

Company's Response: Netflix opposes the proposal, asserting that it is unnecessary. The company emphasises that it is an equal opportunity employer committed to compliance with non-discrimination laws across all jurisdictions where it operates. Netflix maintains a robust compliance framework and regularly evaluates its policies, practices, and programs in alignment with legal requirements and business priorities. It believes its existing practices already address the risk and compliance areas raised in the proposal, rendering an additional report redundant. The company further states that risk analysis and mitigation strategies are core business functions already embedded in its operations. For these reasons, the Board considers the proposal unwarranted and recommends voting against it.

PIRC analysis: This resolution, while framed as a risk assessment request, appears primarily motivated by concerns over the legality and impact of the company's diversity and inclusion initiatives. Netflix already discloses relevant information about its DEI programs and maintains a compliance framework that reflects legal obligations across jurisdictions. The company's current reporting and risk management processes appear sufficient to address the issues raised. As such, the additional report requested may not provide meaningful new insights for shareholders and could divert focus from ongoing efforts. A vote against the resolution is recommended.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Charitable Contributions

Proponent Shareholder: Oklahoma Tobacco Settlement Endowment Trust (TSET)

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Netflix publish an annual report evaluating how its charitable giving may expose the company to risks related to alleged discrimination against individuals based on their religious beliefs or political speech. The proposal contends that Netflix has supported, directly or indirectly through its employee giving match program, nonprofit organizations accused of suppressing certain viewpoints. These include the Southern Poverty Law Center and Human Rights Campaign, which the proponent claims promote policies or classifications that limit freedom of religion and expression. The supporting statement links these associations to broader reputational risks and cites high-profile public controversies and legal actions involving other companies. It suggests that, by continuing support for such groups, Netflix risks alienating consumers and stakeholders with differing viewpoints. The proposal argues that transparency on this issue is necessary to ensure that Netflix's philanthropic activities align with its publicly stated values on diversity and inclusion and to safeguard the company from potential brand and legal liabilities related to perceived viewpoint discrimination.

Company's Response: Netflix opposes the proposal, stating that its philanthropic activities are employee-driven through its matching program and not a product of corporate endorsement or policy influence. The company explains that employee donations are matched through a third-party platform, Benevity, which includes over two million nonprofit organizations globally. Netflix does not restrict causes supported by employees, aside from general exclusions for legality and standing. It emphasizes that direct corporate donations are rare and generally reserved for crisis-related events such as wildfires or the COVID-19 pandemic, and not connected to influencing public policy or advocacy. As such, the Board believes the proposed report would offer little additional value and could misrepresent the nature of the company's limited involvement in philanthropic decisions. Therefore, the Board concludes that the report is unnecessary and recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Disclosure surrounding the company-approved charities allows shareholders to consider diversity in the context of the long-term interests of the company, including stakeholder relationship. However, this resolution appears to focus on ideological diversity with the clear intent to ensure that some views are specifically represented among the charities to which the company's customers can donate. The proponents' request appears to be based on a flawed methodology: the fact that the company provides donations to a variety of charities, including those that some shareholders may find objectionable, does not mean that all viewpoints should be equally acceptable. Given the diversity that already exists among the organisations available for donations, a vote against the resolution is recommended.

SA D'IETEREN NV AGM - 05-06-2025

3. Approve the Remuneration Report

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. In addition, there are no claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration component which makes it unlikely that shareholders will be able to reclaim any variable remuneration unfairly paid out. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Human Right to Water

Proponent Shareholder: NorthStar Asset Management, Inc. Funded Pension Plan

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Digital Realty adopt a formal policy acknowledging and respecting the human right to water, in alignment with international human rights standards. The resolution emphasises the growing water demands of generative AI workloads, with Digital Realty's own AI-related bookings having doubled within a year. It notes that a significant portion of the company's operations, including 39% of water consumption occurs in regions with existing water stress. The proponent argues that, while the company has taken steps to reduce its water footprint, such as using non-potable water and dry air cooling in new facilities, it continues to expand through acquisitions that rely on older, water intensive cooling systems. The proposal raises concerns that increasing water demand may infringe upon local community water supplies and violate the UN defined human right to water. It urges the company to proactively demonstrate leadership by formally codifying a commitment to this right, supported by transparent strategies to minimise future water risk and safeguard community access especially as AI-related infrastructure scales rapidly.

Company's Response: The Board recommends a vote against the proposal, asserting that the requested policy is unnecessary in light of Digital Realty's existing and long-standing water stewardship practices. The company highlights that since 2013, it has adopted water free cooling as a design standard, with three out of four data centers globally using no water for cooling. It reports a 22% reduction in water use intensity since 2020, and notes that less than 6% of its operational capacity is in regions of extreme water stress. Digital Realty further points to its leadership in using recycled and non-potable water now accounting for 43% of its water supply and new retrofitting efforts that have reduced potable water use in some centers by over 90%. It is also piloting AI-driven solutions to optimise water efficiency further. The company argues that its design standards, operational practices, and strategic initiatives already reflect a robust commitment to minimising water usage and protecting community resources. As such, it sees the creation of an additional policy as duplicative and not an effective use of resources.

PIRC analysis: Water scarcity is one of the most pressing physical risks associated with climate change, particularly for water intensive sectors like data center operations. This proposal seeks to ensure that Digital Realty articulates a formal policy commitment to the human right to water, grounded in international standards, and supported by strategies to mitigate water-related impacts. Given the company's growing reliance on generative AI infrastructure, which may significantly increase water consumption, additional transparency on how these risks are managed and mitigated is in shareholders' interests. Such a policy would not only clarify the company's approach to water stewardship, particularly in high-stress regions, but also reinforce long-term resilience. Enhanced disclosure would allow investors to better assess how water related physical risks, including those linked to climate scenarios such as a 1.5°C pathway, are being integrated into operational planning and governance oversight. While the company outlines robust practices, a formal commitment could further embed accountability and provide shareholders with greater confidence in the sustainability of future growth.

1d.. Re-elect John L. Hennessy - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board and Chair of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent due to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Also, in terms of best practice, it is considered that the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Moreover, at this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the Chair of Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure. As there is no Sustainability Committee, the Chair of the Board is considered accountable for the Company's sustainability programme and there is concerns with the Company's sustainability policies and practice.

During the year under review, the company has been fined for its community or human rights practices by the company, and while the full impact of this decision is yet to be ascertained, these practices are considered to be examples of a corporate culture not aligned with the interests of all stakeholders.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

3.. Shareholder Resolution: Shareholder Right to Act by Written Consent

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, urges shareholders to support a proposal allowing the right to act by written consent. He argues that such a right would enable shareholders to take timely action outside of annual or special meetings, particularly in light of Alphabet's prolonged stock price slump from $381 in 2019 to $169 in late 2024. This mechanism would allow shareholders to initiate and act upon issues efficiently and apply pressure on the Board to be more responsive and accountable. The ability to act by written consent is portrayed as a tool for shareholders to catalyse strategic changes, including removing underperforming directors. This right would give shareholders the power to propose and approve actions that might otherwise be delayed or ignored by the Board, helping to mitigate governance complacency. Chevedden emphasises that empowering shareholders in this manner strengthens checks on board decisions and aligns governance with long-term value creation. The proposal advocates for a more agile governance structure where shareholder engagement is not hindered by the limitations of scheduled meetings.

Company's Response: Alphabet's Board of Directors recommends voting against the proposal, arguing that permitting shareholder action by written consent undermines transparency, excludes broader shareholder participation, and risks procedural confusion. The company maintains that shareholder meetings whether annual or special are more equitable and informative venues for corporate decision-making, as they ensure dissemination of complete information via proxy statements and provide a forum for all shareholders to engage. Alphabet highlights that actions taken via written consent could allow special interest groups to advance agendas without inclusive deliberation, possibly leading to contradictory or duplicative initiatives. Moreover, managing simultaneous or conflicting consents would impose unnecessary administrative and financial burdens. The Board points to existing governance tools like the ability of 20% of shareholders to call special meetings, annual director elections, and a proxy access provision as sufficient for shareholder influence and oversight. Alphabet also notes its proactive shareholder engagement efforts and argues that the proposed change would offer little benefit while increasing governance risks and complexity.

PIRC analysis: The resolution seeks to provide shareholders with the right to act by written consent, an important governance mechanism that allows shareholders to respond quickly in situations where waiting for a formal meeting would delay necessary action. Although the company highlights its governance practices and shareholder engagement efforts, these do not substitute for the flexibility and responsiveness that written consent enables. Shareholders should have the ability to initiate and approve actions without being constrained by the timing and structure of company-organised meetings. Granting this right would enhance shareholder oversight and accountability, particularly in times when urgent intervention is needed. A vote in favour is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Financial Performance Policy

Proponent Shareholder: Vermont Pension Investment Commission

Proponent's argument: The Vermont Pension Investment Commission calls on the company to adopt a policy ensuring that financial performance metrics used to calculate senior executive incentive compensation exclude, wherever practicable, the impact of share repurchases. The proposal asserts that executive pay should reflect operational outcomes and personal performance, not financial engineering. Buybacks can distort key performance indicators such as earnings per share and return on equity, potentially inflating executive rewards without reflecting actual value creation. The proponent highlights that executives do not determine when buybacks occur-this responsibility lies with the Board-so executives should not benefit from a metric they do not control. Academic research is cited to show that buybacks can artificially help firms meet earnings targets and divert capital from long-term investments like R&D and capital expenditure. In 2023, Alphabet spent $62.2 billion on buybacks, surpassing its investments in research and capital projects. The concern is that these expenditures may skew performance-based compensation inappropriately. The resolution would apply to future compensation plans and not interfere with current contractual obligations. The proponent urges support to reinforce alignment between executive pay and genuine operational performance.

Company's Response: Alphabet's Board opposes the proposal, asserting that its Compensation Committee-comprised solely of independent directors-is best placed to design and oversee executive compensation in alignment with shareholder interests and company strategy. The company argues that its current pay structure already reflects performance accountability, informed by market benchmarking and third-party consultant input. The Board views buybacks as a legitimate capital allocation strategy to return value to shareholders, and notes they also offset dilution from equity awards. It argues that limiting how performance metrics incorporate buybacks would unduly restrict compensation design flexibility and create misalignment with industry peers, potentially impairing Alphabet's ability to attract and retain talent. Furthermore, the company challenges the feasibility of the proposal, particularly in adjusting performance metrics like Total Shareholder Return (TSR), which is inherently market-based and influenced by numerous variables beyond share repurchases. Implementing such adjustments would be complex and subjective, especially if comparative peer metrics also required modification. The Board concludes that its compensation policies effectively drive long-term shareholder value and that the proposed policy would not serve stockholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: The proposal addresses a significant misalignment in incentive compensation structures, where executive rewards may be inflated by financial engineering rather than genuine operational success. While the resolution allows for flexibility in implementation and does not mandate strict use of GAAP metrics, its core intention, to prevent stock buybacks from distorting performance pay, is sound. The company's argument that adjustments would be impractical or too complex is unconvincing, given that performance metrics are already subject to numerous subjective adjustments by the Compensation Committee. The use of total shareholder return, which can be artificially boosted by buybacks, further underscores the risk of rewarding executives for financial maneuvers rather than business fundamentals. Although the resolution could be more prescriptive, it highlights a growing concern around performance measurement integrity. Executive pay should reflect value creation through innovation, efficiency, and sustainable growth, not reductions in share count. On balance, it is appropriate to support the resolution to strengthen transparency and fairness in the design of executive incentives.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Charitable Partnerships

Proponent Shareholder: Bowyer Research, Inc., on behalf of Oklahoma Tobacco Settlement Endowment Trust

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Alphabet to issue an annual report assessing how its charitable partnerships may pose reputational or operational risks related to discrimination against individuals based on their speech or religious beliefs. The proponent argues that corporate alignment with certain advocacy groups such as the Human Rights Campaign (HRC) can undermine fundamental freedoms of speech and religion. The proposal references Alphabet's platinum level support for HRC, whose advocacy includes corporate policies on gender identity and healthcare that are politically and culturally divisive. It expresses concern that partnerships of this nature may conflict with Alphabet's stated values around inclusion and diversity of perspective, particularly for individuals holding conservative religious or political views. The proponent believes the company's current affiliations risk alienating stakeholders, damaging brand reputation, and creating an environment that is not politically or religiously neutral. It highlights other companies that have reconsidered or withdrawn similar partnerships and suggests Alphabet do the same by transparently analyzing and reporting the impact of such charitable affiliations on stakeholder trust and business risk. The resolution calls for a measured, non-confidential report that ensures Alphabet's giving aligns with its public commitments to diversity and expression.

Company's Response: Alphabet opposes the proposal, stating that it would interfere with the company's ability to manage its charitable initiatives and operational strategy. The Board asserts that decisions about philanthropic partnerships fall under routine business matters, best handled by management with the relevant expertise. Alphabet emphasizes the long-standing mission of Google.org to fund global initiatives that promote opportunity, guided by strict internal governance and oversight mechanisms. The company maintains that its philanthropic programs operate independently of political or religious agendas and undergo thorough due diligence, including legal and ethical compliance reviews. Google.org explicitly avoids funding lobbying or political activity, and Alphabet clarifies that support for an organization does not equate to endorsement of every stance it may take. Alphabet also reaffirms its commitment to freedom of expression, as stated in its Code of Conduct and product mission. The Board believes current policies adequately safeguard against discriminatory outcomes and ensure that all employees, regardless of personal views, are respected and protected from bias. In light of these systems and values, the Board concludes that the proposed report is unnecessary and would not offer meaningful additional value to shareholders.

PIRC analysis: Disclosure surrounding the company approved charities allows shareholders to consider diversity in the context of the long-term interests of the company, including stakeholder relationship. However, this resolution appears to focus on ideological diversity with the clear intent to ensure that some views are specifically represented among the charities to which the company's customers can donate. The proponents' request appears to be based on a flawed methodology: the fact that the company provides donations to a variety of charities, including those that some shareholders may find objectionable, does not mean that all viewpoints should be equally acceptable. Given the diversity that already exists among the organisations available for donations, a vote against the resolution is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Request to Cease CEI Participation

Proponent Shareholder: The National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Alphabet's Board consider ending participation in the Human Rights Campaign's Corporate Equality Index (CEI), a benchmarking tool that the proponent characterises as ideologically driven and harmful to shareholder value. The proponent asserts that the CEI enforces controversial social and political standards under threat of negative scoring, compelling companies to adopt divisive policies unrelated to their business mission. The proposal highlights that Alphabet's perfect CEI score reflects compliance with criteria that it claims promote gender ideology and controversial healthcare practices, risking reputational harm and financial backlash. Citing examples like Bud Light, Target, Disney, and Planet Fitness, the proponent argues that companies which aligned themselves with similar activist causes suffered major declines in revenue or market value. It further notes that several companies, including Lowe's and Walmart, have ended CEI participation in response to shareholder concerns. The proponent views Alphabet's continued participation as a misuse of shareholder assets and a source of avoidable risk, calling on the Board to reconsider its alignment with what it describes as a hyper-partisan advocacy agenda.

Company's Response: Alphabet's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it constitutes an attempt to micromanage the company's ordinary business operations. The company explains that decisions about participation in third-party benchmarking tools like the CEI are operational matters that should remain within the discretion of management, who are best positioned to evaluate strategic partnerships and reputational implications. Alphabet emphasises that engagement with organisations does not equate to full endorsement of their agendas and that its participation in external frameworks is guided by internal assessments and stakeholder feedback. The company highlights its established compliance program and oversight structure, which include regular Board-level monitoring of reputational, regulatory, and policy risks. It also stresses that its public policy contributions are transparent and subject to restrictions, such as prohibiting political use by recipient organisations. Given these existing safeguards and the need for management flexibility, Alphabet concludes that the proposal is not in the best interests of the company or its shareholders and recommends a vote against it.

PIRC analysis: This resolution appears to be part of a broader campaign by right-wing advocacy groups to challenge corporate diversity and inclusion frameworks by targeting participation in external benchmarking tools such as the Human Rights Campaign's Corporate Equality Index (CEI). While proponents frame the proposal as a fiduciary concern related to reputational and financial risk, the resolution is ideologically motivated and seeks to halt Alphabet's participation in a standard benchmarking practice that supports inclusive workplace policies. Participation in initiatives like the CEI promotes alignment with widely accepted norms on non-discrimination and supports the company's ability to attract and retain talent across a diverse workforce. These frameworks are part of ordinary business operations and fall within management's discretion. Ending participation would send a signal of retreat from commitments to inclusion and equality, potentially undermining employee morale and company reputation. The resolution functions more as a spoiler than a constructive governance proposal, aiming to disrupt Alphabet's existing DEI strategies rather than improve transparency or performance. A vote against the resolution is recommended.

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Trillium ESG Global Equity Fund

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Alphabet to enhance its climate-related disclosures to help investors assess whether the company can meet its 2030 climate commitments. The proponent recognises Alphabet's leadership on climate issues, including its early shift to 100 percent renewable energy matching and its goal to reach net-zero greenhouse gas emissions and achieve 24/7 carbon-free energy by 2030. However, the resolution raises concern about Alphabet's growing emissions, which rose 13 percent in 2023 and are now 48 percent higher than in 2019. The increase is primarily attributed to energy demands from AI data centers, which are growing faster than Alphabet's ability to deploy clean energy. Given this trajectory, the resolution urges Alphabet to provide additional transparency on its decarbonisation plan, including scenario analysis, stress testing of its emissions reduction strategies, a breakdown of expected emissions savings per initiative, alignment with global 1.5°C climate pathways, and estimated carbon removal needs. These disclosures would help investors assess the credibility of Alphabet's climate transition strategy, mitigate risk, and reinforce the company's reputation for climate leadership.

Company's Response: Alphabet opposes the proposal, stating that it already discloses extensive information about its climate goals, progress, and the obstacles involved in achieving its targets. The company's annual Environmental Report includes year over year emissions data by scope, carbon free energy metrics, and detailed methodology. It also covers risk assessments and acknowledges the difficulties of decarbonising energy intensive operations such as AI-powered data centers. Alphabet emphasises that its pursuit of innovations like next generation nuclear and geothermal energy reflects its commitment to long-term climate progress. The company argues that its current disclosures meet best practices and evolving regulatory expectations and are sufficient for shareholders to understand its climate approach. It views the requested report as duplicative and unnecessarily burdensome. Alphabet believes such detailed scenario planning and emissions trajectory modeling would divert resources from operational execution and that climate oversight and planning are best managed by internal experts. The Board concludes that the requested enhanced disclosure is not necessary and recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: Most investors recognise that aligning with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change's 1.5 degrees Celsius pathway requires reducing emissions by half by 2030 and reaching net zero by 2050. These targets should be integrated into business planning through clear short-term and medium-term objectives, supported by transparent reporting. Although Alphabet has set ambitious goals and publicly reports progress, the company's rising emissions, especially from AI-driven data centre growth, raise concerns about the credibility of its transition plan. Shareholders would benefit from additional information that shows how Alphabet intends to meet its climate targets. This includes scenario analysis, progress tracking of key strategies, and detailed projections that align with international science-based pathways. Improved disclosure would also enhance investors' ability to assess how climate-related risks and opportunities are being addressed. Supporting the resolution is recommended to promote accountability and reinforce the company's stated climate commitments.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Equal Shareholder Voting

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by NorthStar Asset Management, Inc. Funded Pension Plan

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Alphabet adopt a recapitalisation plan to transition to a one-share, one-vote structure, phasing out its multi-class voting system over a defined period. Under the current structure, Class B shares hold ten votes per share, giving insiders such as co-founders Larry Page and Sergey Brin majority voting control despite holding a small minority of the company's equity. The proponent argues that this arrangement undermines democratic shareholder governance and entrenches control regardless of management roles. The proposal points to prior shareholder opposition to the creation of non-voting Class C shares and notes concerns over employee-shareholders receiving compensation in stock that lacks voting rights. It links the concentration of voting power to broader governance issues, including workforce treatment and transparency. The resolution draws on recommendations from key institutional investors and governance bodies such as the Council of Institutional Investors and BlackRock, which support sunset clauses and equal voting rights. Governance ratings agencies have also flagged Alphabet's voting structure as high risk. The proponent argues that equal voting rights are fundamental to shareholder accountability and urges support for this recapitalisation plan.

Company's Response: Alphabet opposes the proposal, asserting that its multi-class capital structure has supported long-term strategic stability and value creation since the company's founding. The Board highlights that the dual-class structure enables management to focus on transformative investments and innovation without the short-term pressures often imposed by markets. Alphabet credits this structure with enabling the company to grow into one of the world's most successful businesses. The Board emphasises that the company has robust governance practices, including an independent chair, majority independent directors, fully independent key committees, and regular executive sessions. It also points to its annual director elections and majority voting standard as examples of strong shareholder rights. Governance structures are reviewed regularly, and the Board believes the current system continues to serve the company and its investors well. The proposal, in the Board's view, would remove a foundational aspect of Alphabet's strategy and governance, and would not be in shareholders' best long-term interests. For these reasons, the Board recommends voting against the resolution.

PIRC analysis: It is considered that the existing class structure treats the majority of shareholders inequitably: the principle of one-share-one-vote is considered to be best practice and voting rights should be allocated equitably. Support is recommended.

9.. Shareholder Resolution: Due Diligence Process to Assess Human Rights Risks in CAHRA

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Zevin Asset Management

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Alphabet to commission an independent third-party report on the company's due diligence processes related to human rights risks in conflict-affected and high-risk areas (CAHRA). The proponent highlights the growing number and severity of global conflicts and argues that Alphabet's products and services may be used by state and government actors for surveillance, censorship, and military operations in these regions. Specific concerns include cloud infrastructure and data access in Saudi Arabia, surveillance technology used by U.S. Customs and Border Protection, links to Chinese surveillance systems, and the controversial Project Nimbus contract with the Israeli government. The proponents cite Alphabet's own Human Rights Policy, which affirms transparency and commitment to responsible technology use, but argue that there is currently no clear disclosure on how these commitments are operationalised or enforced in CAHRA contexts. The resolution seeks more detailed and transparent oversight of the human rights due diligence practices Alphabet uses to assess customer usage of its technology in high-risk regions, and whether additional safeguards or governance are necessary to mitigate exposure to human rights violations.

Company's Response : Alphabet's Board opposes the proposal, asserting that the company already has a robust human rights governance structure in place to assess and manage civil and human rights risks. Oversight is provided by senior management and the Audit Committee, while the internal Human Rights Program advises product teams, conducts due diligence, and engages external experts to inform business practices across the company. Alphabet states that its approach is grounded in international frameworks such as the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the Global Network Initiative Principles. The company also points to its long-standing transparency efforts, including the Google Transparency Report and participation in the Lumen database for government content removal requests. In relation to AI risks, Alphabet has developed governance frameworks based on its AI Principles and publishes an annual Responsible AI Progress Report. The Board believes that existing oversight, policies, and reporting practices provide sufficient accountability and transparency. Therefore, the Board concludes that the additional reporting requested by the proposal would not result in meaningful added value for shareholders and recommends voting against it.

PIRC analysis: Shareholders increasingly expect companies to demonstrate how they manage human rights risks in complex geopolitical environments, especially where products and services may contribute to surveillance, censorship, or armed conflict. Alphabet operates globally, including in markets that present heightened human rights risks, and has acknowledged its commitments under international frameworks such as the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. However, despite these commitments and existing reporting through transparency portals, investors lack clarity on how the company evaluates and responds to the misuse of its technology in conflict-affected and high-risk areas. The proposal is not asking for a change in policy but rather for enhanced disclosure of the processes by which Alphabet assesses and mitigates human rights risks, particularly in regions where government and military use may conflict with human rights standards.

A third-party assessment would help reassure shareholders that the company's due diligence processes are credible, consistent, and responsive to growing scrutiny. The requested report is reasonable, limited in scope, and aligned with the interests of long-term investors. A vote in favour of the resolution is recommended.

10.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Risks of Discrimination in GenAI

Proponent Shareholder: Inspire Investing, LLC, on behalf of William C. Cunningham

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Alphabet to publish a report evaluating how it oversees and mitigates risks of bias and discrimination in its generative AI (GenAI) systems, particularly regarding political or religious views. The proponent argues that GenAI tools are increasingly used to moderate content and deliver information, giving them significant influence over public discourse. The resolution expresses concern that vague policies around misinformation and hate speech could lead to the suppression of lawful and constitutionally protected viewpoints. It claims that pressure from governments, regulatory environments, and activist groups risks pushing Alphabet's AI models toward censoring controversial but legitimate perspectives. The proponent cites past incidents and reputational controversies, such as the Gemini model's handling of historical representations, to support the case that GenAI systems can produce discriminatory or ideologically biased outputs. It asserts that without enhanced oversight, Alphabet could expose itself to legal and reputational risks, particularly around freedom of speech and equal treatment. The resolution seeks transparency on how Alphabet ensures its AI systems uphold civil rights, religious freedom, and political neutrality.

Company's Response : Alphabet opposes the proposal, stating that its existing AI governance and transparency practices already address the concerns raised. The company emphasises its foundational mission to make information universally accessible, which underpins its commitment to free expression. It highlights its longstanding AI Principles, which are updated regularly, and its investments in responsible AI development, including the publication of detailed annual AI Responsibility Reports. Alphabet points to "model cards" and technical documentation-such as those accompanying the Gemini 1.5 and Imagen 3 models-as core tools for communicating safety evaluations, bias mitigation, and system limitations. These materials are designed to disclose how the company minimises unfair bias and representational harm while maintaining model safety and compliance with societal norms. Alphabet also references public statements and disclosures, including "Our Approach to the Gemini App," which outline its methodology for governing GenAI. The Board concludes that existing disclosures and processes sufficiently address stakeholder concerns and that the requested report would be duplicative. Therefore, it recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The resolution requests a report on how Alphabet manages risks of bias in generative AI systems, particularly with regard to political and religious viewpoints. While presented as a call for fairness and civil rights, the resolution is aligned with a right-wing perspective that seeks to ensure conservative viewpoints are not excluded or marginalised in AI outputs. It reflects ongoing concerns among certain shareholder groups about how content moderation policies and AI safety protocols may interact with freedom of expression and ideological diversity. Alphabet has already disclosed substantial information through its model cards, technical reports, and Responsible AI progress updates, which outline its efforts to mitigate bias, maintain safety, and uphold responsible development standards. While the general subject of AI fairness is legitimate, the proposal does not demonstrate that Alphabet's current disclosures are insufficient or that additional reporting would significantly enhance investor understanding. Given the company's existing governance measures and the framing of the proposal, a vote against the resolution is recommended.

11.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Cyber-Related Risks

Proponent Shareholder: The National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The proposal asks Alphabet to publish a report assessing risks related to the unethical or improper use of external data in the development and deployment of its artificial intelligence products. The proponent expresses concern that the company's leadership in the AI industry, combined with the vast data resources at its disposal, may lead to legal, reputational, and regulatory risks if data is sourced or handled inappropriately. The supporting statement highlights past privacy incidents involving Alphabet, including a class-action lawsuit over data collection in private browsing mode and regulatory inquiries in the European Union.

It also raises concerns about the company's historic relationships with government surveillance entities. The resolution argues that Alphabet's dominant role in AI development increases the importance of robust data governance and transparency, particularly as regulators and courts begin to scrutinise data sourcing practices in AI training. The proponent suggests that consumer trust and long-term value creation depend on the company demonstrating that its AI data practices are ethical, lawful, and rigorously overseen.

Company's Response: Alphabet opposes the proposal, asserting that its AI and data governance systems already provide strong oversight and meet evolving legal and ethical expectations. The company outlines its internal infrastructure, which includes detailed tracking of AI asset lineage, compliance with global regulatory frameworks like the EU AI Act, and robust safety protocols. It states that user privacy is a foundational principle, supported by responsible data minimisation, transparent controls, and compliance with regulations such as GDPR. Alphabet notes it has introduced publisher opt-out controls via Google-Extended and that its AI launches follow structured governance reviews. The company also references its Secure AI Framework (SAIF), which provides security principles for AI systems and aligns with international best practices. Alphabet highlights its active engagement with policymakers and cross-industry initiatives such as the Coalition for Secure AI. The Board believes that the requested report would duplicate existing oversight structures and disclosures, and that current practices sufficiently address the concerns raised. A vote against the proposal is therefore recommended.

PIRC analysis: The proposal requests that Alphabet publish a report on the ethical and operational risks arising from the use of external data in the training and deployment of its artificial intelligence systems. As Alphabet scales its AI models across numerous applications, stakeholders have a legitimate interest in understanding how data is sourced, how usage risks are evaluated, and how those risks are being mitigated. This includes concerns about the legality of data scraping, potential bias in datasets, and the use of AI systems in contexts that may raise ethical, legal, or social concerns. A comprehensive review of data usage should not only address the technical processes involved, but also examine how the company governs issues related to privacy, consent, and downstream applications such as surveillance. The resolution is not overly prescriptive and allows for reasonable flexibility in how the company might implement the report. It is aligned with broader investor expectations that AI governance includes transparent oversight of data practices, particularly in light of mounting regulatory scrutiny and reputational risk. A vote in favour of the resolution is recommended.

12.. Shareholder Resolution: Human Rights Impact Assessment of AI-Driven Targeted Ad Policies

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Shareholder Association for Research & Education on behalf of the United Church of Canada Pension Plan

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Alphabet publish an independent third-party Human Rights Impact Assessment (HRIA) focused on its AI-driven targeted advertising policies and practices. The proponent highlights that targeted advertising, which accounts for over 75 percent of Alphabet's revenue, relies heavily on AI and data-intensive profiling methods that can pose risks to privacy and human rights. Concerns are raised about the use of cookies and personal data tracking, the lack of transparency in ad safety reporting, and whether appropriate human rights due diligence is conducted for newly launched AI ad features. The proposal also points to relevant EU regulations, such as the Digital Services Act and the Artificial Intelligence Act, which may require stronger safeguards. The proponents argue that Alphabet's AI Principles and prior commitment to human rights due diligence require a comprehensive evaluation of how its ad systems may contribute to discrimination or harm. The assessment would enhance transparency, help mitigate regulatory and reputational risks, and clarify the company's commitments to ethical AI deployment in advertising, a core part of its business strategy.

Company's Response: Alphabet opposes the proposal, stating that it already has a robust human rights governance framework and privacy program in place. The company points to its Human Rights Program, which includes oversight by senior management and the Audit Committee, and is aligned with international standards such as the UN Guiding Principles. This program advises product teams, conducts due diligence, and engages with external experts. Alphabet also outlines its privacy measures, including data minimisation, user transparency tools, and opt-in ad controls. The company notes that its Publisher Policies prohibit monetisation of discriminatory or harmful content and that its Ads Safety Report provides visibility into enforcement actions. In the context of AI use in advertising, Alphabet emphasises its use of guardrails, advertiser review tools, and policy alignment with anti-discrimination laws. It also references its evolving use of privacy-enhancing technologies and cross-industry collaboration to improve advertising safety and compliance. The Board argues that these existing structures and policies sufficiently address the concerns raised and that a new assessment would be redundant. Therefore, it recommends voting against the resolution.

PIRC analysis: Due to the significant revenue generated by online advertising, concerns arise regarding the potential dissemination of misleading information through the platform, posing potential risks to human rights globally, for which there is a growing amount of evidence. While the company asserts the integration of human rights into its processes, questions persist about the application of these principles to its advertising infrastructure, especially concerning user privacy, bias and discrimination. Regulatory frameworks such as the Digital Services Act and upcoming EU's Artificial Intelligence Act aim to address these concerns, mandating companies to uphold human rights in their data handling and algorithmic decision-making (a process that for the EU aims at trustworthy AI). While the company's response indicates that some work has been done in this area, more could be done. As such the request for the assessment appears reasonable. Support is recommended.

13.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Alignment of Lobbying Activities with Child Safety Policies

Proponent Shareholder: Proxy Impact, on behalf of the Broz Family Investments, LLC

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests a report evaluating whether Alphabet's direct and indirect lobbying activities are aligned with its public commitments to child safety. The proponent notes that while Alphabet has developed public-facing policies supporting child protection online, it has simultaneously lobbied against, or sought exemptions from, several child safety-related bills in the United States and internationally. These include federal legislation such as the Kids Online Safety Act, the EARN IT Act, and the Children and Teens Online Privacy Protection Act, as well as state-level legislation in New York, California, and Utah. The proposal highlights reports of Alphabet's lobbying efforts to weaken or oppose key provisions in bipartisan child safety bills, raising questions about whether such positions are consistent with its stated values. The resolution calls for transparency in how Alphabet assesses alignment between its policy positions and its lobbying, including the role of trade associations, coalitions, and front groups. The proponents argue that without such a review, there is a risk of reputational damage and diminished stakeholder trust, particularly as scrutiny of Big Tech's role in child safety continues to grow.

Company's Response: Alphabet opposes the proposal, arguing that its child safety principles and policy engagement are already public and consistent. The company refers to its 2023 publication of a "Legislative Framework to Protect Children and Teens Online," which outlines support for legal protections including bans on personalised advertising to minors, the implementation of privacy-preserving settings, and requirements for mental health support. Alphabet maintains that this framework already addresses the issues raised in the proposal, making an additional report unnecessary. The company affirms that it offers age-appropriate products like YouTube Kids and Family Link, alongside content moderation policies and wellbeing tools. It also points to its support for several bipartisan child safety bills, including the REPORT Act and STOP CSAM Act. The Board argues that Alphabet's efforts already demonstrate consistency between its internal policies and legislative engagement, and that transparency is already provided through published frameworks, policies, and lobbying disclosures. Therefore, the Board recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The resolution seeks a report on how Alphabet's lobbying activities align with its stated commitments to child safety. The focus is on whether public policy efforts, both direct and through third parties are consistent with the company's child protection principles. While Alphabet has published a legislative framework outlining its child safety positions, it has also opposed or sought carve-outs in several key child safety bills in the United States and other jurisdictions. This raises legitimate concerns about the coherence between the company's advocacy and its commitments. Alphabet's existing disclosures do not address whether lobbying decisions are evaluated for consistency with child safety goals. Ensuring that products, advertising strategies, and policy influence activities do not undermine child rights is a critical part of responsible business conduct. This resolution is a reasonable request for transparency and due diligence, aligned with shareholders' long-term interests in human rights and risk oversight. A vote in favour of the resolution is recommended.

14.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Online Safety for Children

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by Boston Common Asset Management on behalf of the Boston Common ESG Impact US Equity Fund

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Alphabet publish a report including quantitative metrics to assess whether and how it has improved child safety and harm reduction across its platforms, particularly YouTube. The proponent raises concerns about the psychological, physical, and privacy-related harms that children may face online, including cyberbullying, exposure to harmful content, sexual exploitation, and mental health issues. The resolution highlights legal and reputational risks, noting that 42 U.S. states have filed lawsuits against Alphabet over harms allegedly caused to children by YouTube's design and business practices. It also references violations of children's data privacy laws and the company's prior fine by the FTC. Although Alphabet has issued statements and provided general updates about its policies, the resolution points out that no consistent or transparent child safety performance metrics are available for shareholders. The proponents argue that without measurable reporting, stakeholders cannot properly assess the effectiveness of Alphabet's child protection tools or evaluate the risk management of one of its most significant user groups.

Company's Response: Alphabet opposes the proposal, stating that it already discloses substantial information related to its child safety efforts and operates under new and evolving regulatory reporting requirements. The company outlines a broad range of initiatives in YouTube and Google products, including Youth Principles, age-appropriate design, ad restrictions for minors, and partnerships with child protection groups. It also references the tools and APIs it provides to external partners to combat child sexual abuse material (CSAM). Alphabet publishes quarterly transparency reports that track enforcement actions, policy violations, and safety-related content removals. It also discloses the Violative View Rate metric to show the percentage of views associated with content violating its policies. Furthermore, Alphabet points to its compliance with regulatory frameworks like the EU Digital Services Act and the UK Online Safety Act, which already require regular and detailed reporting on child safety. The Board concludes that the requested report would be redundant and that existing disclosures and global compliance mechanisms already offer a comprehensive view. Therefore, it recommends voting against the resolution.

PIRC analysis: The proponent asks for a report on the risks associated with potential and actual risks for children (personally or mentally). Such risks can have significant reputational and financial consequences for a company and it is in the best interests of shareholders to be informed of the Company's exposure to and management of such risks. While the company indicates that it is committed to internet's governance and to prevent risks to children deriving from it, it does not disclose the risks to which the company might be exposed regarding additional violations of child safety. Ensuring that users, advertisements and products do not cause setbacks to child rights or straightly violate child rights is considered to be due diligence, in order to uphold company's policies on human rights and minimise corresponding risks. As such, a vote for the resolution is recommended.

Non-Executive Chair of the Board. The Chair is not considered to be independent as he is a representative and CEO of Deutsche Telekom the major shareholder. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls on Corpay to adopt a standing policy requiring that the roles of CEO and Board Chair be held by two separate individuals, with the Chair being an independent director whenever possible. The proposal allows for flexibility, including interim non-independent Chairs during transitions, and suggests phasing the policy in at a CEO contract renewal or succession. It argues that separating these roles enhances oversight and governance, emphasising that the Chair's role is to supervise the CEO, not manage the company. The proponent criticizes Corpay's current structure, in which both roles are held by one individual, and raises concerns about the lead independent director's qualifications, tenure, and limited experience in companies of Corpay's scale. The proposal received 48% shareholder support in 2024, which the proponent interprets as majority support from professional investors informed by proxy advisory services. The argument stresses that such strong backing shows meaningful shareholder concern about board independence and urges fellow investors to vote in favor to align governance practices with best in class standards.

Company's response: Corpay's Board recommends a vote against the proposal, arguing that mandating a permanent separation of the Chair and CEO roles would unnecessarily restrict its flexibility to adopt the most effective leadership model for the company at any given time. The Board maintains that its current governance framework, including the appointment of a Lead Independent Director, already ensures strong oversight and accountability. It defends Mr. Stull, the current Lead Independent Director, as highly qualified, citing his leadership experience in investment management, public and private company board service, and educational credentials. The Board asserts that Mr. Stull's deep understanding of the company's operations has contributed significantly to Corpay's performance, including sustained earnings growth since its IPO. The Board highlights its ability to adjust the governance structure when needed and stresses that current practices - such as executive sessions, committee leadership by independent directors, and direct shareholder engagement - support effective oversight. It also references broader market trends, noting that most S&P 500 companies retain leadership flexibility. Concluding that the existing structure supports unified leadership while maintaining independence and effectiveness, the Board advises shareholders to vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent Shareholder: The Accountability Board, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges shareholders to support a policy requiring an independent Board Chair at Chipotle, arguing that separating the CEO and Chair roles promotes stronger governance and effective oversight. Referencing a 2020 proposal that received 44% support, backed by ISS, Glass Lewis, and prominent investors, the proponent highlights the risks of concentrated leadership. This risk materialized in 2024 when Brian Niccol's departure from his dual CEO-Chair role left both top positions vacant, triggering a 7.5% stock drop and a scramble to stabilize leadership, including postponing retirements and issuing costly retention awards. While an independent Chair was later appointed, the proponent argues that a formal policy is essential to prevent similar disruptions and ensure long-term governance stability. Citing ISS and Glass Lewis guidelines, the proposal underscores the importance of independent leadership for managing conflicts of interest and overseeing management effectively. The proponent emphasizes that this policy would not be retroactive and would allow exceptions when no independent director is available, thus balancing flexibility with a commitment to stronger oversight. Ultimately, the policy would help safeguard shareholder interests, support strategic continuity, and enhance board accountability.

Company's response: Chipotle's Board opposes the proposal, asserting that mandating an independent Chair would unnecessarily constrain its ability to adapt leadership structures to evolving company needs. The Board emphasizes the importance of flexibility, citing its own actions in August 2024 when it appointed an independent Chair in response to the CEO's departure. It argues that this demonstrates its capacity to respond thoughtfully to specific circumstances without needing a rigid policy. The company also points to its governance framework, which includes an engaged, primarily independent Board, annual director elections, and committees led exclusively by independent directors. These mechanisms, it claims, ensure robust oversight regardless of the Chair's independence status. The Board contends that a fixed structure may be counterproductive and does not align with the fiduciary duty to adopt the most suitable leadership model at any given time. It also notes that maintaining leadership flexibility is consistent with broader market practice among large corporations. Ultimately, the Board believes that shareholders' interests are best served by preserving discretion over leadership decisions and recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Report On Discrimination Risks Related to Charitable Partnerships

Proponent Shareholder: Bowyer Research, Inc. on behalf of the Oklahoma Tobacco Settlement Endowment Trust

Proponent's argument: The proponent calls on Lululemon to publish an annual report analysing how its charitable partnerships may expose the company to risks related to discrimination based on speech or religious exercise. Citing concerns that Lululemon is associated with advocacy groups taking divisive political positions, the proposal argues that these partnerships could alienate employees, customers, and investors with differing views. Specifically, it references Lululemon's involvement with the Don't Ban Equality coalition and past donations to organisations like Black Lives Matter and Reclaim the Block, suggesting these affiliations politicise the brand and potentially harm shareholder value. The proponent also notes public criticism over Lululemon's events on capitalism and gender, indicating reputational risks tied to social and political activism. The proposal asserts that companies should avoid entangling their brands in ideological controversies and should prioritise neutrality and shareholder value. It argues that transparent reporting on the impact of charitable giving related to these issues is essential for ensuring that partnerships align with fiduciary responsibilities and broad shareholder interests.

Company's response: Lululemon opposes the proposal, stating that it already provides ample disclosure regarding its charitable giving and social impact through its publicly available Impact Report. The company explains that its philanthropic strategy, managed through the Centre for Social Impact, is focused on equity in wellbeing and is structured around movement, mental health, and community care. Partnerships are evaluated to ensure alignment with Lululemon's mission and values. The Board argues that producing an additional report would be redundant, unlikely to yield meaningful new insights, and would divert resources from core business priorities. It also notes that its current governance processes include oversight of enterprise risks, including reputational and stakeholder concerns. The company contends that the proponent's request is politically motivated and lacks a clear link to shareholder value. It affirms that its giving strategy is transparent, inclusive, and responsibly managed with input from global and regional experts. Lululemon concludes that the proposed report is unnecessary, and urges shareholders to vote against the proposal as it does not serve the company's or shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of board diversity lie in widening the perspectives on business issues brought to bear on decision-making, avoiding too great a similarity of attitude and helping companies understand their customers, marketplace, supply chain and workforces. Disclosure surrounding the board's composition allows shareholders to consider board diversity in the context of the long-term interests of the Company. Disclosure of a policy to improve diversity and goals that have been set to meet this policy also reassures shareholders that a diverse board is not just an aspiration but a goal. However, this resolution has been filed by a right-wing policy think tanks as a spoiler resolution to prevent other shareholders from filing resolutions regarding the company's board diversity and focuses on ideological diversity with the clear intent to ensure that conservative views are represented on the board as well as so-called liberal perspectives. Opposition is recommended.

CATERPILLAR INC. AGM - 11-06-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Civil Rights Audit

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Caterpillar Inc. to commission a civil rights audit aligned with the Civil Rights Audit Standards developed by PolicyLink. Despite public statements and awards recognizing Caterpillar's commitment to diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI), the company has recently scaled back several DEI initiatives, such as requiring senior leadership approval for external speakers and surveys, and ceasing participation in the Human Rights Campaign Corporate Equality Index. The proposal argues these rollbacks could harm the company's ability to attract and retain talent, grow its customer base, and meet other strategic objectives. A civil rights audit would provide a structured and independent evaluation of how the company's policies and practices impact marginalized communities and stakeholders. The proponent asserts that such an audit would not only assess current practices, but also offer actionable recommendations to improve inclusion and mitigate legal, reputational, and business risks. The audit, conducted by an independent expert, would require meaningful stakeholder engagement and public disclosure of findings. This transparency would better equip shareholders and management to evaluate Caterpillar's actions in light of its DEI commitments and global business objectives. The proposal concludes that a civil rights audit is a necessary tool for accountability and sustainable governance.

Company's Response : Caterpillar opposes the proposal, arguing that it is unnecessary and would not offer meaningful additional value beyond its existing governance and risk oversight structures. The company affirms its commitment to inclusion through its core values, global Code of Conduct, and strategic human capital management framework. It states that its enterprise risk management program already addresses compliance, social, and governance risks-including those related to bias and discrimination. The Board emphasizes that its committees, including the Audit, Compensation and Human Resources, Sustainability and Public Policy, and Nominating and Governance Committees, each play a role in monitoring these risks. Caterpillar also highlights its legal compliance with non-discrimination regulations across its global operations. The company asserts that a civil rights audit would duplicate current practices, divert valuable resources, and offer no material improvement to current oversight mechanisms. Moreover, the Board believes that Caterpillar's risk assessment framework and demonstrated inclusion initiatives better serve shareholder interests than commissioning a third-party audit. The company concludes that its resources are more effectively used in executing its enterprise strategy and maintaining regulatory compliance, and that the proposed audit is unlikely to yield actionable insights beyond what is already monitored and implemented internally.

PIRC analysis: The request for an independent civil rights audit addresses highly material risks related to workforce inclusion, legal compliance, and stakeholder trust-factors that directly affect long-term shareholder value. The proposed civil rights audit is a feasible, time-bound initiative aligned with established ESG standards, requiring no operational disruption. It offers high-yield, material benefits: improved talent recruitment and retention, enhanced stakeholder trust, and early identification of legal and reputational risks. These advantages serve the long-term interests of shareholders and outweigh the modest, non-recurring costs cited by the board. The audit is diagnostic, not prescriptive: with the company's recent rollback of DEI measures, an independent audit offers a timely, objective assessment of its practices, reinforcing accountability and strategic alignment with shareholder and stakeholder expectations. Support is recommended

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Employee Charitable Giving Match

Proponent Shareholder: Bowyer Research, as representative of Kelly Aimone

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests that Caterpillar conduct an evaluation and issue a report on the potential risk of religious discrimination stemming from the company's exclusion of religious charities in its employee gift-matching program. The proponent argues that Caterpillar's policy may implicitly discriminate against religious employees by limiting their philanthropic freedom. They contend this creates a chilling effect on religious expression within the company, citing surveys indicating widespread employee concern over corporate retaliation for expressing religious views. The supporting statement emphasizes that recognizing diverse religious perspectives is essential for employee engagement and inclusion, and the current matching policy unfairly applies scrutiny only to faith-based entities. The policy is seen as vague, arbitrary, and potentially in conflict with recent Supreme Court decisions that affirm religious protections across all employment privileges. By excluding donations to religious charities or making them subject to additional conditions, Caterpillar may be failing to respect its employees' beliefs equally. The proposal seeks transparency and clarity through a formal evaluation to mitigate reputational, legal, and employee engagement risks.

Company's Response : Caterpillar recommends voting against the proposal, stating that its employee charitable giving program, operated by the Caterpillar Foundation, already functions under clear, nondiscriminatory guidelines. The company explains that the Foundation matches donations to eligible 501(c)(3) nonprofits and accredited educational institutions but excludes organizations that do not align with its charitable purpose or that are ineligible under IRS rules, including political groups and private trusts. While the Foundation does not match contributions to houses of worship, it may support donations to faith-based organizations that serve a secular purpose, are open to all, and do not use donations for religious activities. The Board argues that these criteria are standard practice across corporate match programs and do not reflect bias. Furthermore, oversight of the Foundation's activities is already in place through the company's Sustainability and other Public Policy Committee. The company believes that the existing governance structure ensures appropriate review and accountability, and as such, the requested report would be redundant. It maintains that current practices are sufficient and that the proposal's premise mischaracterizes the intent and structure of the giving program.

PIRC analysis: Disclosure surrounding the company-approved charities allows shareholders to consider diversity in the context of the long-term interests of the company, including stakeholder relationship. However, this resolution appears to focus on ideological diversity with the clear intent to ensure that some views are specifically represented among the charities to which the company's customers can donate. The proponents' request appears to be based on a flawed methodology: the fact that the company provides donations to a variety of charities, including those that some shareholders may find objectionable, does not mean that all viewpoints should be equally acceptable. Given the diversity that already exists among the organisations available for donations, a vote against the resolution is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Employment Issues

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Caterpillar to consider abolishing its Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) policies, citing legal and financial risks tied to such programs. The argument is based on several recent legal decisions, including SFFA v. Harvard and Muldrow v. City of St. Louis, which allegedly call into question the legality of corporate DEI initiatives. The proponent warns that these developments increase Caterpillar's exposure to litigation, particularly under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act, and cites a growing trend of shareholder and consumer backlash leading other corporations to retreat from DEI efforts. Companies like John Deere, Tractor Supply, and Harley-Davidson are named as examples of firms that have recently rolled back DEI programs in response to similar concerns. The proposal critiques Caterpillar's active DEI initiatives, including hiring policies, employee resource groups, and supplier diversity efforts, arguing these actions prioritize race and sex in ways that pose financial and reputational harm to the company. Given the current legal and cultural environment, the proponent believes maintaining such policies exposes the company to avoidable risks and violates its fiduciary duty to protect shareholder value.

Company's Response : Caterpillar recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it represents inappropriate micromanagement of the company's business operations and human capital strategy. The company emphasizes that its DEI approach is rooted in its core values-Integrity, Excellence, Teamwork, Commitment, and Sustainability-and aims to attract and retain a high-performing, inclusive global workforce. Caterpillar underscores that its employment practices comply fully with applicable non-discrimination laws across all jurisdictions where it operates. The company stresses the importance of aligning its workforce with the diverse needs of its global customers and communities, and argues that DEI initiatives are central to supporting long-term enterprise strategy. Oversight of these programs is already provided through a structured governance framework, including board-level committees responsible for risk, compliance, and public policy. The board believes that human capital management decisions are best handled by experienced senior management within existing legal boundaries. Caterpillar reaffirms its robust compliance infrastructure, emphasizing that any changes to its DEI programs will be made in alignment with legal developments and business needs. The board concludes that the actions requested in the proposal are unnecessary and not in the best interests of shareholders.

PIRC analysis: This proposal misrepresents recent legal developments to advance an ideological agenda aimed at dismantling the company's Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) policies. It wrongly interprets court decisions as a directive to abandon inclusive practices, ignoring the complexity of these rulings and the fact that empirical research has consistently shown that diverse companies financially outperform peers. The requested rollback undermines a material and strategic aspect of company's human capital management-one that supports long-term value through employee engagement, innovation, and global market alignment. Eliminating DEI programs introduces reputational, recruitment, and operational risks that far outweigh any speculative legal benefits. DEI is integral to company's ability to serve diverse markets and meet stakeholder expectations. Rejecting this proposal reflects an understanding of the long-term costs of disengagement from inclusive stakeholder governance. Opposition is recommended.

W. R. BERKLEY CORPORATION AGM - 11-06-2025

1a.. Elect Ronald E. Blaylock - Non-Executive Director

Non-Executive Director, member of the Compensation Committee and the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee. Not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. In terms of best practice, it is considered that the Compensation Committee and the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members. Regardless of the independent representation on the Board as a whole, opposition is recommended. The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Chair of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee is not up for election, a member of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Lastly, at this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the chair of Nominating and Corporate Governance committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure. As the chair of the nomination committee is not up for election, members of the committee are held accountable for this lack of disclosure. Opposition is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Director Election Resignation Governance Policy

Proponent Shareholder: North Atlantic States Carpenters Pension Fund

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that W.R. Berkley Corporation adopt a Director Election Resignation Governance Policy to strengthen shareholder influence in director elections. Specifically, the policy would require all directors to submit an irrevocable resignation in the event of failing to receive majority shareholder support in an uncontested election. The Board would be obligated to accept the resignation unless it identifies a compelling reason to reject it. Furthermore, if a "holdover" director again fails to receive majority support at the next annual meeting, their resignation would become automatically effective 90 days after vote certification. This policy aims to reinforce the binding nature of shareholder votes and prevent unelected directors from continuing to serve indefinitely due to vague board discretion. The proposal criticizes the Company's existing resignation policy for allowing excessive board latitude in handling election outcomes. It emphasizes the need to align governance practices with the principles of majority rule and shareholder rights under Delaware law. The proponent argues that the proposed policy strikes an appropriate balance between board discretion and shareholder authority by enabling one rejection of resignation but enforcing accountability on a second vote failure, thereby reinforcing the primacy of shareholder decisions in governance matters.

Company's Response : The Company opposes the proposal, asserting that its adoption would undermine board flexibility and may conflict with Delaware law. W.R. Berkley Corporation affirms its commitment to robust governance, emphasizing its current policy which already mandates that directors tender their resignation if not re-elected. Under existing guidelines, the Board, guided by the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee, assesses such resignations within 90 days, considering all relevant factors in alignment with fiduciary duties. The proposed policy's requirement to accept a resignation unless a "compelling reason" is found, and to mandate resignation effectiveness after a second vote failure, imposes a rigid framework that could restrict the Board's ability to act in the Company's best interests. The Board argues that this new standard introduces ambiguity and legal uncertainty, potentially prompting litigation and removing discretion in nuanced cases. It further warns that automatic resignation could leave vital Board roles vacant at inopportune times. The Company highlights its high director re-election rates and other strong governance practices-majority voting, independent board leadership, and shareholder engagement-as evidence that the existing framework already ensures accountability. Therefore, it concludes that the proposed policy is unnecessary and not in the long-term interest of shareholders.

PIRC Analysis: Mandatory resignation requirement for directors who do not secure the necessary shareholder support, shifting the burden of proof to the board (as opposed to leaving it to the board's discretion as currently) to justify retaining a director who has failed to secure majority shareholder support, an automatic resignation mechanism for holdover directors who are not re-elected in subsequent elections, and the board being required to report the reasons for its actions to accept or reject a tendered resignation in a form filed with the stock exchange: all of these are considered to increase transparency and accountability in the director election and resignation process. This proposal aims to ensure that the rationale for board decisions is publicly disclosed and that shareholder input in the decision-making process at the company, of which director election is a key part, be consequently followed up on. Support is recommended.

TARGET CORPORATION AGM - 11-06-2025

4.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Affirmative Action Initiatives

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Target to assess and report on how its affirmative action initiatives may create risks of actual or perceived discrimination based on protected categories under civil rights law. It cites recent legal developments that heighten the potential for legal challenges to such initiatives, including Supreme Court decisions in SFFA v. Harvard, Muldrow v. City of St. Louis, and American Alliance for Equal Rights v. Fearless Fund. The proponent argues these rulings signal growing legal risk for corporate DEI efforts. The supporting statement highlights that Target explicitly promotes DEI practices such as prioritising spending on Black-owned businesses and media, and DEI-focused hiring goals which, the proponent contends, may be considered discriminatory, immoral, or unlawful. The proposal suggests that such practices could expose Target to significant financial and reputational harm through lawsuits and civil rights claims, particularly in light of Target's large workforce and public visibility. It concludes that a formal risk assessment is urgently needed to understand and mitigate these risks.

Company's response: The company opposes the proposal, stating it is neither in the best interest of shareholders nor an effective use of resources. Target affirms its commitment to being an equal opportunity employer, emphasising that it complies with all relevant anti-discrimination laws and maintains a robust compliance and risk oversight framework. The Board argues that the proponent's concerns are unwarranted, as Target does not engage in discriminatory practices and any suggestion otherwise misrepresents the company's diversity initiatives. These initiatives are part of a broader strategy to attract and retain a high-performing workforce that reflects the communities Target serves. The company frames its DEI actions not as affirmative action in the legal sense, but as responsible business practices aimed at fostering respect, inclusivity, and long-term growth. Target asserts that its existing processes already address the areas highlighted by the proposal, rendering the requested risk assessment redundant and not value generating for shareholders.

PIRC analysis: DEI (Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion) policies, when appropriately implemented and transparently disclosed, can help companies better reflect the communities they serve, enhance employee engagement, and mitigate reputational and legal risks. Transparency in how these initiatives are managed and assessed allows shareholders to evaluate alignment with long-term business strategy and compliance frameworks. This resolution requests a risk assessment of affirmative action initiatives in light of evolving legal interpretations. However, the proposal appears to focus primarily on potential legal liabilities without fully acknowledging the business rationale or broader governance benefits of DEI policies. Additionally, the proposal originates from an organisation with a consistent history of challenging DEI-related corporate practices. Target already outlines its commitments to diversity and equal opportunity in its disclosures and maintains a compliance framework to address legal risks. In this context, the requested report may not provide significant additional benefit to shareholders. Opposition is recommended.

MONOLITHIC POWER SYSTEMS INC AGM - 12-06-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Right to Call Special Meetings

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, urges the Board to amend company governance documents to allow shareholders holding a combined 10% of common stock-or the lowest amount permitted by state law-to call a special shareholder meeting, including virtual ones. He emphasises this right as a tool to prevent Board complacency and to ensure shareholders can influence corporate strategy when necessary. With Monolithic Power's stock experiencing volatility in 2024, the ability to convene meetings on urgent matters is presented as vital for responsive governance. The proposal argues that online meetings lower logistical barriers, making it easier to convene such sessions. Chevedden further asserts that similar proposals received significant support at other companies in 2024, indicating a strong precedent and shareholder appetite for such reforms. The ability to call special meetings is framed as a crucial accountability mechanism, enhancing engagement and ensuring the Board remains responsive to shareholder concerns. The proposal closes with a request for a "yes" vote.

Company's response: The Board opposes the proposal, arguing it is unnecessary and potentially disruptive, as MPS already amended its Bylaws in March 2025 to allow shareholders to call special meetings. However, the existing threshold is set at 30% with a one-year holding requirement, which the Board considers a safeguard against misuse. The company contends that lowering the threshold to 10% with no holding period could allow a small, potentially unrepresentative group to repeatedly disrupt operations with special meetings. Such disruptions would divert critical resources and attention from long-term strategy execution. The Board also highlights that the current threshold aligns with industry norms in the semiconductor sector and with the S&P 500. They stress that MPS's corporate governance policies-including proxy access, annual proposals, and ongoing investor engagement-already provide robust mechanisms for shareholder influence. The Board believes that the existing Bylaw appropriately balances empowerment with protection from activist overreach and recommends shareholders vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The right to call a special shareholder meeting provides shareholders with a way of communicating with the Board and debating and voting on issues with the rest of shareholders which in itself enhances shareholders' rights. The 10% threshold recommended by the proponent is considered more adequate than the company-proposed 30%. Support is recommended.

The Board is seeking approval to issue up to an additional 10% of the Company's issued share capital for cash for use only in connection with an acquisition or a specified capital investment. This is within the recommended guidelines. 1j.. Elect Mark S. Vidergauz - Senior Independent Director

Senior Independent Director, Chair of the Compensation Committee, Chair of the Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee and member of the Audit Committee. Not considered independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is considered that a Senior Independent Director should be independent, in order to fulfil the responsibilities assigned to that role, irrespective of the level of independence of the Board. Similarly, in terms of best practice, it is considered that the Compensation Committee, Nominating and Corporate Governance Committee and the Audit Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

It is considered that the Chair of the Compensation Committee is responsible for the company's executive compensation, and owing to concerns with the company's executive compensation, opposition is recommended.

Furthermore, the level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Lastly, at this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the chair of nomination committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure.

BEST BUY CO. INC. AGM - 13-06-2025

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Support for Shareholder Right to Act by Written Consent

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by the proponent of the 2021 proposal on written consent

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Best Buy's board to enable shareholders to act by written consent, allowing them to take necessary actions outside of formal meetings with the minimum required vote threshold. The proponent argues this is crucial amid Best Buy's long-term stock price slump-from $114 in 2021 to $87 in late 2024-suggesting that directors may have become complacent. Written consent rights would provide shareholders with an additional mechanism to propose or enforce strategic shifts that could help lift the company's performance. It also adds accountability pressure on directors, since those underperforming could be more easily removed without waiting for annual meetings. The proponent highlights that a similar proposal in 2021 received notable support, and contends that due to current stock underperformance, even greater backing is expected in 2025. According to the proponent, this governance change would incentivize stronger board oversight and faster responsiveness to shareholder concerns. Shareholder empowerment through written consent is thus presented as a necessary corrective tool to enhance corporate performance and governance.

Company's Response : The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the right to act by written consent is unnecessary, redundant, and potentially harmful to shareholder interests. Best Buy shareholders already hold the right to call special meetings at notably low thresholds-10% for most matters and 25% for merger-related issues-making written consent duplicative. The Board argues that written consent processes lack the structure, transparency, and inclusivity of shareholder meetings. Unlike meetings, written consent does not ensure all shareholders receive notice, have adequate review time, or access to debate and changing votes. It could allow small, possibly short-term shareholders to pursue narrow agendas, creating confusion and undermining long-term interests. The Board further notes the rarity of written consent use among S&P 500 firms, with only 30% allowing it and just one actual usage among large-cap U.S. companies in the past decade. Best Buy emphasizes its robust governance and shareholder engagement practices, such as proxy access, annual board elections, and no supermajority voting provisions. Additionally, a similar 2021 proposal gained support from only 22% of shareholders. For these reasons, the Board finds written consent rights to be unnecessary, disruptive, and not aligned with shareholder interests.

PIRC analysis: The company has strong special meeting rights, such as the ability of shareholders to call one with 10% of shareholders. Nevertheless, there are emergency situations where convening a special meeting might take too long or be too difficult, and written consents may be gathered more quickly. Regardless of the percentage required to call special meetings, written consent rights are very important. A vote for the resolution is recommended.

6.. Shareholder Resolution: Request to Cease CEI Participation

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proposal urges Best Buy to reconsider and potentially end its participation in the Human Rights Campaign's Corporate Equality Index

(CEI), which the proponent describes as a partisan initiative pushing radical LGBTQ+ agendas. It argues that a perfect CEI score, such as the one Best Buy holds, reflects alignment with controversial positions that may alienate customers and harm shareholder value. The proposal equates CEI adherence with supporting gender ideology, irreversible medical procedures for minors, and the erosion of religious freedoms. It also cites reputational and financial damage experienced by companies like Bud Light, Target, and Disney following similar actions. The proponent claims such corporate activism poses a material risk, as evidenced by Best Buy's "high risk" designation by the 1792 Exchange. They point to peer companies like Lowe's, Ford, and Walmart that have exited the CEI and argue that fiduciary duty obligates Best Buy to consider a similar exit to avoid reputational and financial harm. The proposal concludes that continuing CEI participation exposes Best Buy to unnecessary risks and demands reevaluation.

Company's response: The Board opposes the proposal, asserting that continued participation in the CEI aligns with Best Buy's core values and strategic interests. It emphasizes that the company's success is driven by its people and a culture that promotes inclusion and employee development. Best Buy's commitment to fostering an inclusive environment supports employee retention and satisfaction, with internal surveys showing strong results for inclusion and non-discrimination. The company stresses that its DEI efforts are not political but rooted in long-standing values crucial to business success and stakeholder trust. Additionally, the Board and its Compensation & Human Resources Committee actively oversee cultural development and risk management, including potential reputational risks. These efforts are regularly evaluated and are considered essential to long-term performance. The Board believes the proposal offers no meaningful benefit to shareholders, as existing oversight and policies already address the concerns raised.

PIRC's Analysis: The request to withdraw from the Corporate Equality Index (CEI) is not supported by a demonstrable governance or performance benefit; on the contrary, it appears to be based on a flawed ideological rejection of inclusive corporate culture, rather than a material governance concern. CEI participation aligns with well-established ESG frameworks and supports measurable outcomes in employee engagement, talent retention, and brand reputation—all critical components of long-term value creation. The proponent's invocation of selective market examples lacks contextual rigor and ignores the empirical evidence linking inclusive practices to stronger financial and operational performance. This proposal risks undermining a core aspect of company's human capital strategy by treating diversity as a governance failure rather than an asset. It could also create pressure to reverse programs that enhance workplace equity and resilience. Opposition is recommended.

7.. Shareholder Resolution: Publish a Report on the Company's LGBTQIA+ Inclusion Efforts in its Human Capital Management Strategy

Proponent Shareholder: A shareholder coalition led by The Comptroller of the State of New York on behalf of the New York State Common Retirement Fund

Proponent's argument: The proponents urge Best Buy to publish a report detailing its LGBTQIA+ inclusion efforts within its human capital management strategy. Citing a March 2024 NBC News report, they highlight the company's offer to review employee group donations to LGBTQ causes after shareholder pressure-raising concerns about alignment with prior inclusivity commitments. The proposal emphasizes that inclusive practices lead to higher employee retention and increased profitability, referencing studies from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce Foundation and Gallup polls showing growing LGBTQ representation, particularly among younger generations. The proponents argue that Best Buy's perceived retreat from LGBTQIA+ support undermines its long-standing anti-discrimination values. They contend that shareholders need transparency on policies like non-discrimination, inclusive benefits, donation restrictions, and demographic data collection to assess how the company is adapting to workforce diversity trends and maintaining its reputation as an inclusive employer. They believe public disclosure will enhance accountability and align with shareholder interests.

Company's response: Best Buy's Board unanimously recommends a vote AGAINST the proposal, asserting that the company already integrates LGBTQIA+ inclusion as part of its culture and human capital management. The company emphasizes its long-standing values focused on people and inclusion, supported by an 80,000-strong workforce across diverse geographies. Management invests in workforce engagement through retention monitoring, employee surveys, and action on inclusion, with current results identifying inclusion and non-discrimination as top strengths. The Board notes that existing public disclosures, including the Corporate Responsibility and Sustainability Report, already address diversity-related efforts. Furthermore, oversight by the Compensation & Human Resources Committee ensures alignment of cultural initiatives with stakeholder expectations. The Board argues that the proposed report would not yield new insights or shareholder value, as existing structures already accommodate the concerns raised. Therefore, it concludes the report is redundant and not in shareholders' best interests.

PIRC analysis: This proposal calls for transparency in how LGBTQIA+ inclusion is integrated into the company's human capital strategy—a request grounded in material ESG risk and aligned with long-term shareholder value. Given the public and investor concern triggered by recent changes to the regulatory framework and political sentiment, a formal report would clarify whether the company's practices still match its stated values. Rather than imposing operational changes, the proposal enhances oversight and accountability. Rejecting it risks signaling a weakening commitment to DEI and erodes stakeholder trust. Transparency, not retrenchment, is the mark of resilient corporate governance. Research studies link inclusion to better employee productivity and profitability. Transparent human capital practices support sustained performance. On the contrary, failure to respond transparently could undermine stakeholder trust, expose the company to reputational risk, and weaken employee engagement—especially among younger and more diverse cohorts critical to future talent pipelines. A vote for is recommended.

8.. Shareholder Resolution: Publish Climate Transition Plan to Achieve Stated Goals

Proponent Shareholder: Globalance Bank Ltd. (on behalf of Mr. Norbert Bärlocher)

Proponent's argument: The proposal calls on Best Buy to publish a detailed Climate Transition Action Plan to align its full value chain emissions and operations with the 1.5°C global warming target, as set by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. While the company has set science-based GHG targets, the proponent argues that critical elements are still missing from disclosures, such as complete Scope 3 emissions reporting, specific emission reduction measures for use-phase products, quantitative KPIs integrated into executive compensation, scenario analysis, financial planning aligned with climate targets, and policy advocacy. A forward-looking and comprehensive plan would improve accountability, strategic clarity, and investor confidence in the company's climate goals. The proposal seeks annual updates on progress, excludes confidential data, and suggests incorporating best practices and guidance from leading climate standard-setting organizations to ensure credible and measurable actions toward net-zero emissions in a just and equitable way.

Company's response: Best Buy opposes the proposal, stating it is unnecessary and duplicative of its existing robust climate strategy and disclosures. The company emphasizes its science-based target to reduce operational emissions by 75% by 2030 (over a 2009 baseline) and its broader net-zero commitment by 2040 under The Climate Pledge. It highlights a 69% reduction already achieved and ongoing use of quantitative scenario analysis to assess climate-related risks. Best Buy asserts its strategy includes Scope 1, 2, and relevant Scope 3 emissions, especially Categories 1 and 11, covering supply chain and product use-phase. It reports to CDP and has been named to its Climate A List for seven consecutive years. The company claims it already discloses climate-related data via its annual CRS Report and considers the proposal substantially implemented. Adopting it would divert resources from ongoing initiatives without offering meaningful additional benefits, potentially duplicating efforts and undermining existing climate leadership initiatives. The Board recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The proponent is seeking an acceptable level of additional disclosure on the company's plans for a scenario compatible with the objectives of the Paris Agreement. Comprehensive reporting on climate material risks and opportunities is in shareholders' interests both as a means of informing them of potential risks and opportunities faced by the company, as well as strategies put in place to manage those risks and opportunities, and the goals adopted to reduce and eliminate climate risk from the Company's operations, but also as a means of ensuring that the management and the Board continue to give due consideration to these issues. Additional disclosure would be of benefit to shareholders who could make a more informed judgement related to their investment and of the evaluation of the potential impact of different scenarios, including a 1.5 degrees Celsius scenario, on their businesses, strategy, and financial planning.

It is proposed to approve an amendment to Article VI of the Certificate of Incorporation to eliminate supermajority voting requirements. The proposed amendment would lower the threshold to remove directors for cause from 80% of all classes combined to majority of all voting shareholders. It is considered to be best practice that shareholders should have the right to approve most matters submitted for their consideration by a simple majority of the shares voted. 4.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair Rule

Proponent's argument: The proponent, John Chevedden, requests that Fortinet adopt a binding policy to separate the roles of CEO and Chair, with the Chair being an independent director whenever possible. This policy may be phased in during a CEO contract renewal or transition. Chevedden argues that combining both roles concentrates power and undermines effective oversight. He states that a Lead Director is not a substitute for an independent Chair, as the latter plays a distinct governance role, particularly in overseeing the CEO. He criticizes the transparency of Fortinet's current lead director, asserting that shareholders lack critical information about her qualifications and professional background. Drawing on governance best practices, he emphasizes that an independent Chair helps ensure accountability, strategic guidance, and objectivity in board oversight. By separating these roles, the proposal seeks to enhance the Board's independence and reduce the risk of executive overreach. The proponent concludes by urging shareholders to vote in favor of the proposal to strengthen board leadership and protect shareholder interests through structural reforms.

Company's response: Fortinet's Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that it would unnecessarily limit their ability to determine the best leadership structure. The Board believes flexibility is essential to adapt governance based on Fortinet's evolving needs. Currently, Ken Xie, co-founder and CEO, serves as both CEO and Chairman, a structure the Board supports due to his unique vision, deep knowledge of the company, and strategic customer-facing role. To ensure independent oversight, the Board has appointed a Lead Independent Director, Judith Sim, who they state offers strong counterbalance and oversight through executive sessions, agenda review, and liaison duties. The Board outlines Ms. Sim's professional qualifications and public board experience, disputing the proponent's claim that her background lacks transparency. Fortinet emphasizes its robust governance practices, including annual director elections, majority voting standards, independent committees, and shareholder rights like calling special meetings. Citing data showing that a majority of S&P 500 companies do not require independent Chairs, the Board concludes that a rigid separation policy is unnecessary and could hinder effective governance. Therefore, the Board unanimously opposes the proposal.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

The remuneration structure consists of a fixed salary (partially in deferred shares) and a discretionary component based entirely on deferred shares, with no LTIP or cash bonus schemes in place. Non-Executive Chair of the Board and Chair of the Corporate Governance Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. It is also considered that the Corporate Governance Committee should be exclusively composed of independent members, including the Chair.

Furthermore, the level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Corporate Governance Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall.

At this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the Chair of the Corporate Governance Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. The Chair of the Board is accountable for this shortfall.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: "CEO Pay Ratio Factor" in Executive Compensation

Proponent Shareholder: Jing Zhao

Proponent's argument: The proponent urges Comcast to improve its executive compensation program by incorporating the CEO pay ratio factor. Citing Economic Policy Institute data, the proposal highlights a disproportionate increase in CEO compensation (1,085% since 1978) relative to typical worker compensation (24%). It argues that this widening gap exacerbates income inequality and social disorder, deviating from historically balanced ratios found in other developed economies. Drawing from philosophical references including Aristotle and Adam Smith, the proposal criticises American corporate governance for lacking worker representation and competitive board elections, leading to unchecked executive pay. Comcast's CEO pay ratio rose to 398:1 in 2023 from 385:1 in 2022, which the proponent views as unsustainable and misaligned with recent shareholder rejections of excessive pay at major companies. The proposal asserts that adding a CEO pay ratio factor would encourage rational and fairer compensation practices, reinforcing public trust and corporate legitimacy.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that the Compensation Committee-assisted by an independent consultant-is best equipped to evaluate executive pay. Comcast maintains that its program aligns with shareholder interests, evidenced by strong say-on-pay support in recent years. The company considers the proposal vague and maintains that the CEO pay ratio, as defined by SEC rules, offers little actionable insight due to flawed methodology. These include inclusion of all global employee types without adjustments and a lack of cross-company comparability. Comcast argues that tying pay design to such a metric would compromise the committee's ability to tailor compensation based on market data, individual performance, and strategic priorities. The Board concludes that incorporating the CEO pay ratio would not enhance shareholder value and could undermine effective compensation governance.

PIRC analysis: The disclosure of the CEO pay ratio is a regulatory requirement in the US under SEC rules and is recognised as best practice in many global markets. While the Company already discloses this figure, the proposal goes further by recommending that the ratio be considered as a factor in shaping the executive compensation program. Given that excessive CEO pay relative to the workforce has been a growing concern among investors and the public, inclusion of this metric in pay-setting deliberations may serve to enhance accountability and alignment with stakeholder interests. The Company argues that the ratio lacks decision-useful value due to methodological limitations; however, these are standardised across all US-listed companies and provide a baseline for investor comparison. Moreover, major corporations across various sectors have incorporated ESG-linked or fairness-related metrics into their pay practices without harm to executive recruitment or performance incentives. The proposed approach does not mandate a specific outcome but recommends a structural consideration, which can help foster more equitable and transparent compensation practices. Support for the resolution is recommended.

*6.. Shareholder Resolution: Introduce an Independent Chair RuleProponent Shareholder: National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Comcast adopt a policy mandating the separation of the roles of Chair of the Board and Chief Executive Officer, with a preference for an independent Chair. The supporting statement argues that combining these roles weakens corporate governance by concentrating power in one individual, potentially compromising board independence and risk oversight. It cites expert opinions, including the CFA Institute, Harvard Business Review, and proxy advisors Glass Lewis and ISS, which recommend independent board leadership as a best practice. The proposal warns that a CEO serving concurrently as Chair may impair board discussion quality and oversight. It also highlights a growing trend toward board independence, noting that the percentage of S&P 500 companies with separate CEO and Chair roles has increased from 51% in 2017 to 57% in 2022. Additionally, it contends that former CEOs serving as Chair may hinder board objectivity. The resolution seeks to strengthen governance structures and reduce conflicts of interest by formally separating these leadership functions.

Company's response: The Board recommends voting against the proposal, asserting that maintaining flexibility in board leadership structure best serves the interests of shareholders. Comcast argues that its current structure-combining the roles of CEO and Chair under Mr. Roberts and supported by a strong Lead Independent Director-ensures effective governance and oversight. The company emphasizes that nearly all board members are independent and that key committees are composed exclusively of independent directors. The Lead Independent Director holds meaningful responsibilities, including leading executive sessions, facilitating board-management communication, and representing independent directors externally. The Board argues that mandating separation would constrain directors' fiduciary duties and remove the discretion necessary to adapt leadership structures to evolving corporate needs. Comcast adds that independent chairs remain a minority practice among S&P 100 firms and asserts that all directors, including the Chair, are bound by legal fiduciary duties to act in the company's best interests. The Board concludes that the proposed policy is unnecessary and potentially detrimental to board effectiveness.

PIRC analysis: There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. It is considered that an independent Chair can provide independent oversight of management and facilitates clearer lines of accountability with respect to corporate decisions. Support is recommended.

INTERNATIONAL CONSOLIDATED AIRLINES GROUP SA AGM - 18-06-2025*9. Approve Remuneration Policy*

The proposed changes include allowing executive directors to participate in the newly introduced Stretch Performance Incentive Plan (SPIP) for 300 senior leaders in 2025 and increasing the IAG CEO's shareholding requirement from 350% to 400% of salary to align with his enhanced incentive opportunity under the SPIP. However, the potential total variable pay of up to 650% of salary is viewed as excessive, far exceeding the commonly accepted threshold of 200%. Regarding the annual incentive award, if shareholding guidelines are unmet, 50% of the bonus is deferred into shares, whereas if met, 80% is paid in cash and only 20% deferred; this structure is considered inadequate, with a more appropriate structure being a 50/50 split between cash and shares, with at least a three-year deferral period. The plan's performance metrics do not operate interdependently, meaning vesting can occur without meeting all thresholds, which undermines accountability. The three-year vesting period for the restricted share plan is not seen as sufficiently long-term despite a welcomed two-year holding period. Furthermore, the proposed Executive Directors SPIP relies solely on operating profit as its performance metric, contrary to best practice which recommends at least two quantifiable and interdependent performance metrics, including non-financial ones. The absence of non-financial performance indicators is seen as a flaw, as they are crucial for evaluating executives' broader contributions to the company's long-term performance. Financial metrics alone may not adequately reflect individual efforts, and their volatility is often outside a director's control. Additionally, dividend accruals are not restricted, misaligning executive and shareholder interests since executives receive dividends without the same risk as shareholders. Nonetheless, malus and clawback provisions are in place for all variable pay, offering some mitigation.

Rating: BDB, based on the rating opposition is recommended.

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, Chair of the Nomination Committee and designated non-executive director workforce engagement. Not considered independent as Mr. Moody assumed the interim role of Executive Chairman from 1 July 2020 to 8 March 2021. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. In terms of best practice, it is also considered that the Nomination Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 40%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Additionally, as there is no Chair of a Board-level Sustainability Committee up for election, the Chair of the Board is considered accountable for the Company's sustainability programme, and the Company's sustainability policies and practice are not considered adequate to minimise the material risks linked to sustainability. Furthermore, it would be preferred that companies appoint directors from the workforce rather than designate a non-executive director (NED). DELTA AIR LINES INC AGM - 19-06-2025

Proponent Shareholder: John Chevedden

Proponent's argument: John Chevedden urges Delta Air Lines to permit shareholders to act by written consent, allowing those who hold the minimum number of shares required to approve a measure at a regular meeting to do so without convening one. He argues this would provide shareholders with a crucial mechanism to respond swiftly to board inaction or to address governance issues between annual meetings. Chevedden highlights the stagnation in Delta's stock price - rising from $56 in 2018 to only $64 by late 2024 - as evidence that stronger shareholder oversight is needed. He argues that written consent rights would act as a discipline mechanism, encouraging board members to be more responsive and proactive, especially concerning director qualifications and strategic decisions. The proposal is framed as a logical and overdue enhancement to shareholder rights, especially since it received 46% support in Delta's 2020 annual meeting. Chevedden concludes that written consent would better align the board's interests with those of shareholders, providing a tool to correct underperformance and stagnation, and urges shareholders to vote in favor.

Company's response: Delta's Board opposes the proposal, asserting that existing governance tools already offer shareholders meaningful avenues for engagement and accountability. Shareholders currently have the right to call a special meeting with 20% support, nominate directors via proxy access, and remove directors without cause. The Board argues that written consent bypasses these structured processes, enabling potentially significant corporate action without transparency, deliberation, or notice to all shareholders. They warn this could allow a majority bloc to act unilaterally, excluding other investors and increasing the risk of abuse or short-term decision-making. The Board notes that shareholder engagement is robust, with outreach in 2024 covering 55% of outstanding shares and participation by independent directors. It also cites corporate governance features like majority voting, regular Board evaluations, and a refreshed Board composition with five new independent directors since 2023. Delta maintains that the current framework protects all shareholders through transparent, inclusive procedures and that written consent would undermine these protections. As such, the Board recommends a vote against the proposal, calling it unnecessary and potentially harmful.

PIRC analysis: The company has strong special meeting rights, such as the ability of shareholders to call one with 10% of shareholders. Nevertheless, there are emergency situations where convening a special meeting might take too long or be too difficult, and written consents may be gathered more quickly. Regardless of the percentage required to call special meetings, written consent rights are very important. A vote for the resolution is recommended.

ROYAL BANK OF CANADA AGM - 10-04-2025

4. Amend Existing Executive Share Option Plan

The Board proposes an amendment to the existing Stock Option Plan, which was originally approved in 2000. Under the revised plan, the number of common shares available for issuance will increase by 15 million, raising the total reserved shares to 127 million. Under the plan, participants will be allotted shares that vest over a three-year period, but there are no clearly defined performance targets. Additionally, the plan grants the Board significant discretion in determining vesting conditions at the time of each grant, reducing transparency and weakening the alignment between rewards and performance. Moreover, the total potential reward raises concerns of excessiveness, amplifying risks of shareholder dilution. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

5. Approve the Remuneration Report

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. In addition, there are no claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration component which makes it unlikely that shareholders will be able to reclaim any variable remuneration unfairly paid out. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

8.2. Approve Remuneration for the Members of the Management Board.

It is proposed to approve the remuneration payable to the Members of the Management Board. Variable remuneration appears to be consistently capped, and the payout is in line with best practice. On these grounds, opposition is recommended.

5. Submission for discussion of the Remuneration Report of the members of the Board of Directors for the financial year 2024, in accordance with article 112 § 3 of Law 4548/2018

It is proposed to approve the remuneration paid or due to executives with an advisory vote. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. The Company has fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated, although there are no claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration component which makes it unlikely that shareholders will be able to reclaim any variable remuneration unfairly paid out.

9. Approval of the remuneration and compensation paid to the members of the Board of Directors and its Committees for the fiscal year 2024 and approval of the advance payment of remuneration and compensation for the fiscal year 2025

The Board of Directors recommends to the General Meeting to approve in full the remuneration and compensation paid to the members of the Board of Directors during the fiscal year 2024. At the Ordinary General Meeting, that was held on 25.04.2024, a total amount of up to €682,000 was pre-approved; the fees and compensation finally paid to the Members of the Board of Directors during the fiscal year 2024 amounted to a total sum of €694,280. In addition, it is proposed the shareholders to approve the compensation for the Board for the FY2025 of f €799,488. The amount payable to the Board of Directors by more than 10% per director on annual basis. The increase is considered material and exceeds guidelines, while the company has not duly justified it. Therefore, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

10. Election of the Certified Auditors Accountants firm for the audit of the annual and interim financial statements

EY proposed. An adequate break-down of the nature of non-audit fees is not provided, which makes the assessment of auditor's independence based on the non-audit fee impossible. The date of appointment of the auditor is not disclosed, meaning that there are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor. An oppose vote is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

12. Amendment of the Remuneration Policy of the members of the Company's Board of Directors

The Board of Directors, following the relevant recommendation of the Company's Remuneration & Nomination Committee, proposes to the General Meeting the revision of the Remuneration Policy of the members of the Board of Directors, by adding provisions for a long-term incentive plan for the executive members of the Board of Directors. The revised Remuneration Policy of the Company apart from the Short-Term Incentive Plan (STIP) also includes the terms of a Long-Term Incentive Plan (LTIP) for the Executive Members of the Board of Directors. The Plan consists of four (4) separate reward periods, based on performance, each lasting three years, which begin annually, consecutively, in the years 2024– 2027. Any provided rewards will vest upon completion of the three-year period, subject to the fulfilment of Company performance criteria. Under the existing Plan, the Company performance criteria considered for securing the relevant award amounts are primarily the total shareholder return of the Company (TSR), the Adjusted earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation, and amortization (EBITDA) margin, predefined ESG targets, and the achievement of milestones for Major Projects or Strategic Initiatives as they will be specified and determined by the Board of Directors during the corresponding three-year period of the Plan. The proposed Variable remuneration does not seem to be consistently capped and as such there are excessiveness concerns as the total potential variable remuneration may exceed 200% of the salary. The Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets for performance criteria for its variable remuneration component, which may lead to overpayment against underperformance. There are no claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is against best practices. Overall, opposition is recommended

13. Introduction of a long-term stock award program of the Company (Performance Stock Awards), pursuant to article 114 of Law 4548/2018. Granting authorization to the Board of Directors to determine the specific award terms

The Board of Directors, following the relevant recommendation of the Company's Joint Remuneration & Nomination and Personnel Committee, proposes to the General Meeting the approval of the award of up to 1,250,000 common, registered shares of the Company to executive members of the Board of Directors and/or senior and/or high-level management executives of the Company. The proposed stock award will take place as follows: a) Maximum number and category of shares to be awarded: Up to 340,000 shares will be awarded per three-year period of the program, totalling up to 1,250,000 shares. The nominal value of the shares to be awarded shall not exceed 1% of the paid-up share capital of the Company, b) Source of the shares to be awarded: The shares will be treasury shares pursuant to article 49 § 3 of Law 4548/2018, and c) Award terms: The shares may be awarded in the years 2027, 2028, 2029, and 2030, taking into account the achievement of key performance indicators by the Company over the three fiscal years preceding each award year, such as, indicatively, the total shareholder return of the Company (TSR), the adjusted earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation, and amortization (EBITDA) margin, predefined ESG targets, achievement of milestones for Major Projects or Strategic Initiatives, as they will be specified and determined by the Board of Directors. The award of shares will be subject to a mandatory lock-up period of twenty-four (24) months for the 50% of the shares granted per beneficiary.

The Board proposes the approval of a new incentive plan. Under the plan, the CEO and other executives will be awarded options/rights to receive shares, which will start vesting after three years from the date of award. The Company does not disclose clear performance criteria but only a list of indicators, which makes it impossible to assess clearly the link between pay and performance and is deemed a serious frustration of shareholder accountability. Opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

14. Approval of Treasury Shares Acquisition Program

The Board of Directors proposes to the General Meeting the approval of the acquisition of the Company's treasury shares, in accordance with the provisions of article 49 of Law 4548/2018, in conjunction with the provisions of Regulation (EU) 596/2014 and Delegated Regulation (EU) 2016/1052. The maximum number of treasury shares to be acquired shall not exceed 1% of the Company's paid-up share capital, within a period of 24 months from the date of the relevant resolution of the General Meeting. The Share Buyback authority is limited to 1% of the company's share capital, but it exceeds the 18-month duration. While the percentage limit is within acceptable bounds, the extended time frame raises concerns about long-term shareholder value and potential market impact. This extended period could lead to excessive buybacks beyond the intended scope, which is not in line with standard practices. Given the duration exceeds the typical 18-month limit, opposition is recommended.

4. Appointment of Certified Auditors for the financial year 01.01.2025 - 31.12.2025 and approval of their fees

Deloitte proposed. Non-audit fees represented 28.00% of audit fees during the year under review and 28.00% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees raises some concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than five years. There are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor. Abstention is recommended.

9. Approval of distribution of discretionary reserves of an amount up to €0.23 million to the Company's staff

It is proposed to distribute up to EUR 0.23 millions from reserves, including share premium. Although legal in this market, it is considered that the share premium account should be moved into distributable reserves through a reduction of capital, and it should not be used as distributable reserve per se. As the Company proposes a direct distribution from the share premium account, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

10. Approval of amendment of the Directors' Remuneration Policy

It is proposed to the shareholders to approve the amendments on the remuneration policy of the Company. The proposed amendments are in line with market legislation and are considered adequate, however, the Bonus gap will be increase from 100% to 200% which raises concerns for potential excessiveness. Therefore, an oppose vote is recommended based on excessiveness concerns.

12. Approval to grant free common shares to executives and employees of the Company and affiliated entities, as defined in article 32 of Law 4308/2014

It is proposed to approve the grant free common shares of the Company to executives and employees of the Company and its affiliated entities. This proposal aims to reward executives and employees for their contribution to the achievement of the Group's strategic objectives and of specific financial and operational goals. The total number of free shares to be distributed over a period of twenty-four (24) months shall not exceed ten million seven hundred thousand (10,700,000) common registered voting shares with a nominal value of €0.93 each, i.e. the total nominal value of the shares to be distributed shall not exceed €9,951,000.00, representing 0.86% of the Company's share capital on the date of the General Meeting's decision.

The proposal for employee shareholding are considered to be a positive governance practice, as they can contribute to alignment between employees and shareholders.

On the other hand, executives are also among the beneficiaries: it is considered that support should not be given to stock or share option plans that do not lay out clearly performance criteria and conditions. On balance, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

13. Approval to acquire Company's own shares (Share Buy-back Programme) and granting of relevant authorizations to the Board of Directors

The Share Buyback authority is limited to 0.83% of the company's share capital, but it exceeds the 18-month duration. While the percentage limit is within acceptable bounds, the extended time frame raises concerns about long-term shareholder value and potential market impact. This extended period could lead to excessive buybacks beyond the intended scope, which is not in line with standard practices. Given the duration exceeds the typical 18-month limit, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

17. Granting of permission, as per article 98 par. 1 of Law 4548/2018, to the Members of the Board of Directors and Managers of the Company, to participate on the Board of Directors or in the management of the Company's subsidiaries and affiliates

Approval is sought for directors to serve on the board of other companies engaged in activities within the scope of the company's business. There are concerns over the risks and potential negative impact on shareholders interest connected to directors or other officers of the Company serving for competing companies. In addition, there is insufficient description on how the Company will take measure to monitor the conflicts of interest and prevent any negative effect for the Company and ultimately its shareholders. Therefore, an oppose vote is recommended.

7.4. Appoint the Auditors

PwC proposed. Non-audit fees represented 22.73% of audit fees during the year under review and 22.22% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than ten years. There are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor.

BANK OF AMERICA CORPORATION AGM - 22-04-2025

1a.. Elect Sharon L. Allen - Non-Executive Director

Non-Executive Director, Chair of the Audit Committee, and member of the Corporate Governance and ESG Committee. Not considered independent as owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is considered that audit and nomination committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

At the company, the Audit Committee does not oversee the whistle-blowing hotline. This may increase the risk of such issues not being followed up or escalated which may mean the issue is concealed. On this basis, and on the potential unforeseeable consequences for the company, opposition is recommended to the re-election of the chair of the audit committee, who is considered to be accountable for the concerns with the whistle-blowing reporting structure.

During the year under review, a fine has been issued for fraud at the company, and while the full impact of this decision is yet to be ascertained, there are concerns about the sufficiency of the board-level ethics and compliance oversight. The Audit Committee should take responsibility for overseeing the company's compliance policies, including through effective whistleblower policies. Owing to the apparent failure of board-level oversight to prevent fraud, opposition is recommended to the re-election of the Audit Committee Chair.

1h.. Elect Brian T. Moynihan - Chair & Chief Executive

Chair and CEO. Combined roles at the head of the Company. There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the Company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the Company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. Combining the two roles in one person represents a concentration of power that is potentially detrimental to board balance, effective debate, and board appraisal.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

The Board proposes to amend and restate the Bank of America Corporation Equity Plan (BACEP) to: (i) increase the number of shares available for grant by 100 million; (ii) cap total annual compensation for non-employee directors at $1 million, including cash and equity, with exceptions for donations and special services; and (iii) extend the Plan's expiration. Awards will vest over a three-year period, and quantified performance targets have been set, which is above market practice. However, the potential total reward raises concerns over excessiveness, and the three-year vesting is considered short term. Participation is subject to the discretion of the Compensation and Benefits Committee, which may grant awards to selected employees and directors. The inclusion of non-executive directors is misaligned with good governance, as variable pay may compromise their independent oversight role. Opposition is recommended.

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, chair of the Remuneration Committee. Not considered independent as he previously served as the Company's CEO and President from 1997 to 2015. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. The 158 institutional investors are demanding a total of 500 million euros in compensation because they bought shares without knowing that ING did not have its anti-money laundering measures in order.

Ongoing significant legal allegations against the company have not been adequately resolved at this stage, which could lead to serious financial or reputational consequences for the company. 0010. Approve Financial Statements

Disclosure is adequate. The financial statements were made available sufficiently before the meeting and have been audited and certified. However, serious concerns have been identified: five of the directors are executives, which is higher than average for this market, and many of them have family ties, while the majority stake is held by the Rizzante family holding, who holds approximately 40% of the shares but a majority of voting power due to multiple voting rights. In addition, the former CFO has become non-executive director and sits on the audit committee, potentially having to oversee his own decisions where he was on the board as CFO. There does not seem to be a nomination committee, which raises further concerns on the capacity of the board to assess these issues. On balance, and although no evidence of wrongdoing has been identified, abstention is recommended as a way to signal concern for the company's governance structure.

0090. Amend Shareholders' Meetings Regulations

It is proposed that the board will have faculty to call meetings where participation would be permitted only via the designed proxy (i.e. "rappresentante designato"). While this is permitted by law (most recently with law n. 21/2024), such meetings will prevent shareholders from participating at meetings and from proposing items for debate at the meetings. While the law maintains intact shareholders' rights to send questions (up to three days prior to the meeting) and add items on the agenda (if written communication is sent at least 15 days prior to the meeting).

Meetings are a place for debate and decision: shareholders should have the right to ask questions to the board and senior management during a meeting. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. Namely, restrictions to participation at meetings should not be used lightly and might be allowed only in cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Opposition is recommended.

14. Approve the Remuneration Report

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. In addition, there are no claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration component which makes it unlikely that shareholders will be able to reclaim any variable remuneration unfairly paid out. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

16. Approve Performance Share Matching Plan LTI 2024

Under the plan, the CEO and other executives will be awarded rights to receive shares in exchange for part of the reinvestment of their salary. The shares resulting from reinvestment will be matched by free shares awarded by the Company. While re-investment of the bonus in shares, or payment of part or all of the bonus in shares, are considered positive practice, share matching plans are viewed as a de facto discount for executives to buy company shares. They can eventually result in excessive payments versus performance. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

6. Appoint Forvis Mazars as Principal Statutory Auditors

Forvis Mazars proposed. Non-audit fees represented 6.06% of audit fees during the year under review and 10.03% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than five years. 16. Delegation of authority to the Board of Directors to issue, without preferential subscription right of the shareholders, ordinary shares and securities

Danone is also requesting shareholder approval to authorize the Board of Directors to issue ordinary shares and securities without preferential subscription rights, for a 26-month period. The maximum issuance under this authorization would be EUR 17 million in nominal share capital (approximately 10% of current share capital) and up to EUR 2 billion in debt securities. While shareholders would not have an automatic right to purchase these shares, the Board may grant them a priority period at its discretion. The shares would be priced at least equal to the last trading price on Euronext, with a maximum discount of 10%. This resolution aims to provide Danone with greater financial flexibility to raise capital quickly from new investors while ensuring compliance with regulatory requirements.

Authority to issue shares without pre-emptive rights is proposed for within the 10% of the current share capital limit. However; the duration of the authority exceeds 12 months. It is considered that shareholders should have the occasion to vote on such resolutions annually.

17. Authorise the Board to Increase the Number of Shares Issued in case of Exceptional Demand

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 5%, in case of exceptional demand.

A green shoe authorisation enables an authorization of additional shares in the event of exceptional public demand. In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 5% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. Given the potential for inequitable treatment of shareholders, opposition is recommended.

GRUPO AEROPORTUARIO DEL PACIFICO AGM - 24-04-20256. Authorise Share Repurchase

It is proposed to fix the maximum amount available to directors, for the purpose of buying shares on the market. Although this is technically not an authority to repurchase shares, shareholders in Mexico do not approve individual authorities to repurchase shares. As such, identifying the total amount which can be used for repurchasing shares is considered an indirect authority to buy back shares on the market. These resolutions will not be supported unless the Board has set forth a clear, cogent and compelling case demonstrating how the authority would benefit long-term shareholders. 1. Approve Financial Statements

Disclosure is acceptable and the report was made available sufficiently before the meeting. However, The Company has not disclosed the fees paid to the auditors for the year under review, and what non-audit services have been provided, if any. Under Brazilian legislation, companies are not required in their financial statements to disclose the amount paid for the External Audit except where additional services have been engaged and the value of such services exceeds 5% of the total amount paid to the external auditor. Nevertheless, it is considered that companies should go beyond minimum regulatory requirements. Not disclosing the fees paid to the auditors is considered to be a serious breach of shareholder accountability, as it is impossible to assess the existence of potential conflicts of interest that would hinder the independence of the auditor. On this ground, opposition is recommended.

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors receive a variable remuneration in the top of their fees and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 181 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 631% of the fixed pay, which is deemed excessive. Non-Executive Director and member of the Audit Committee. Not considered to be independent, as this director is considered to be in a material connection with the current auditor: Vittorio Furlan had previously served as Advisory Director, Data and Analytics in EY Advisory based first in Sydney, Australia and then Malaysia. It is considered that the Audit Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members. Regardless of the independent representation on the Board as a whole, opposition is recommended.

8. To re-appoint Messrs Ernst & Young PLT as Auditors of the Company for the financial year ending 31 December 2025 and to authorise the Directors to fix their remuneration

EY proposed. Non-audit fees represented 6.50% of audit fees during the year under review and 6.50% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than five years. There are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor.

However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. 19. Authorise the Board to Increase the Number of Shares Issued in case of Exceptional Demand

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 15%, in case of exceptional demand.

A green shoe authorisation enables an authorization of additional shares in the event of exceptional public demand. In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 15% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. Given the potential for inequitable treatment of shareholders, opposition is recommended.

IV. Authorise Share Repurchase

It is proposed to fix the maximum amount available to directors, for the purpose of buying shares on the market. Although this is technically not an authority to repurchase shares, shareholders in Mexico do not approve individual authorities to repurchase shares. As such, identifying the total amount which can be used for repurchasing shares is considered an indirect authority to buy back shares on the market. These resolutions will not be supported unless the Board has set forth a clear, cogent and compelling case demonstrating how the authority would benefit long-term shareholders. As no clear justification was provided by the Board, an oppose vote is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

It is proposed to approve the remuneration policy with a binding vote. The Company has disclosed quantified targets for performance criteria for the entirety of its variable remuneration component. It is proposed a new incentive plan. Under the plan, the CEO and other executives will be awarded rights to receive shares in exchange for part of the reinvestment of their salary. The shares resulting from reinvestment will be matched by free shares awarded by the Company. While re-investment of the bonus in shares, or payment of part or all of the bonus in shares, are considered positive practice, share matching plans are viewed as a de facto discount for executives to buy company shares. They can eventually result in excessive payments versus performance. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

17C. Issuance of Shares for PSP 2025/2027 Incentive Plan

Under this allocation, Non-Executive Directors would receive a variable component on top of their fees. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

10.8. Discharge the Supervisory Board

Standard resolution. At the company, there is no external whistle-blowing hotline. This suggests that such concerns that should be raised by a whistle-blower are dealt with internally, which may increase the risk of such issues not being followed up or escalating to a level where the higher was the level of the misconduct, the more likely is the issue to be concealed. On this basis, and on the potential unforeseeable consequences for the company, opposition is recommended.

11. Approve Remuneration Policy

It is proposed to approve the remuneration policy with a binding vote. Variable remuneration does not seem to be consistently capped and as such there are excessiveness concerns as the total potential variable remuneration may exceed 200% of the salary. The Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets for performance criteria for its variable remuneration component, which may lead to overpayment against underperformance. There is absence of claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is against best practice. Opposition is recommended.

12. Approve the Remuneration Report

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. There are concerns regarding excess as the total variable remuneration exceeded 200% of the salary. In addition, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. PFIZER INC. AGM - 24-04-2025

1.2. Elect Albert Bourla - Chair & Chief Executive

Chair and CEO. Combined roles at the head of the Company. There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the Company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the Company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. Combining the two roles in one person represents a concentration of power that is potentially detrimental to board balance, effective debate, and board appraisal.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Religious Discrimination Against Employees

Proponent Shareholder: Kelly Aimone, represented by Bowyer Research Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proposal requests Pfizer to conduct and publish a report evaluating the risks associated with religious discrimination against employees. The proponent argues that Pfizer, as one of the largest employers in the U.S., should be proactive in promoting religious inclusion by supporting faith-based employee resource groups (ERGs), which are currently absent despite existing ERGs for other identity groups. Citing external studies like the Viewpoint Diversity Score and the 2023 Freedom at Work survey, the proposal claims many employees fear repercussions for expressing religious views, even outside the workplace. It warns that recent Supreme Court decisions have broadened religious protections, implying that the lack of faith-based ERGs may present legal and reputational risks. The proponent believes that embracing religious diversity through formal structures will enhance talent attraction, employee engagement, and corporate culture. The requested report should evaluate these risks without disclosing proprietary information or pending litigation matters.

Company's response: The company opposes the proposal, stating that an additional report is unnecessary and would not enhance shareholder value. Pfizer asserts it already upholds a strong non-discrimination framework that includes religion among other protected characteristics, enforced through comprehensive policies, including an Equal Employment Opportunity policy and an anonymous reporting system. The company highlights mechanisms like its annual employee survey ("Pfizer Pulse"), safe space initiatives, and an Office of the Ombuds that facilitate employee feedback and support. Pfizer also states it has a robust religious accommodation policy in place, and that its People Experience team is trained to address related issues. The company views its existing DEI efforts as sufficient and believes they already encompass religious diversity. The Board concludes that the requested report would be redundant, citing its confidence in Pfizer's current practices to safeguard religious inclusion and employee well-being. Therefore, the Board unanimously recommends a vote against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The proposal requests the Company to issue a report evaluating the risks related to religious discrimination, framed in terms of supporting religious expression and faith-based employee resource groups (ERGs). While the protection of employees from discrimination on the basis of religion is an important principle already enshrined in law and in many corporate non-discrimination policies, this resolution is part of a broader campaign by right-wing advocacy groups to reframe corporate diversity efforts around ideological and religious identity, often in opposition to existing diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI) initiatives. The proponent references tools and surveys developed by conservative think tanks to challenge prevailing DEI practices and positions religious employee groups as being unfairly excluded. While the resolution may appear to promote inclusivity, its intent is more aligned with inserting ideological agendas into corporate governance and weakening support for other protected categories. Opposition is recommended.

8. Approve Maximum Remuneration

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 44,2 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 265% of the fixed pay, which is deemed excessive. In addition, there is lack of disclosure with respect of targets and measurable criteria for variable remuneration, which prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment. The maximum Annual Bonus opportunity increased from 150% to 200% of the fixed salary for the CEO, and from 125% to 150% of the fixed salary for the CFO during the year under review. Total variable pay for the CEO can therefore reach 325% of the base salary, which is considered excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 200%. The deferral period on the Annual Bonus is considered inadequate: for the Annual Bonus, 30% of any award will defer to shares for three years until the shareholding requirement is exceeded by 25%, after which 100% will be paid in cash. It is considered best practise that half of the award vests to shares for a period of at least two years. For the Share Reward Plan, there are no performance measures linked to the rewards, however, there is a three year vesting period and usually a further two-year holding period, such that the vested shares are released five years after being granted. Dividend equivalents are added in the form of shares at each vesting date. The inclusion of non-financial performance measures on the Annual Bonus is welcomed. Malus and clawback apply.

ORKLA ASA AGM - 24-04-20253. Approve the Remuneration Report

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. In addition, there are no claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration component which makes it unlikely that shareholders will be able to reclaim any variable remuneration unfairly paid out. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

6.1. Re-Elect Stein Erik Hagen - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, and member of the Compensation Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent as the director is considered to be connected with a significant shareholder; the director and his children jointly own Canica AS. Also not considered independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Furthermore, in terms of best practice, it is considered that the Compensation Committee should be comprised exclusively of independent members.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

6.2. Re-Elect Liselott Kilaas - Non-Executive Director

2. Appoint the Auditors

PwC proposed. Non-audit fees represented 10.75% of audit fees during the year under review and 16.41% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than ten years. There are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor.

SUZANO SA AGM - 25-04-2025

2. Approve Financial Statements

Disclosure is acceptable and the report was made available sufficiently before the meeting. However, The Company has not disclosed the fees paid to the auditors for the year under review, and what non-audit services have been provided, if any. Under Brazilian legislation, companies are not required in their financial statements to disclose the amount paid for the External Audit except where additional services have been engaged and the value of such services exceeds 5% of the total amount paid to the external auditor. Nevertheless, it is considered that companies should go beyond minimum regulatory requirements. Not disclosing the fees paid to the auditors is considered to be a serious breach of shareholder accountability, as it is impossible to assess the existence of potential conflicts of interest that would hinder the independence of the auditor.

Based on PIRC's overall assessment of the company's transition planning and climate governance capabilities, the company was rated Red, indicating that it falls significantly short of PIRC's expectations. In particular, the company has failed to commit to net zero emissions by 2050. As such, it is recommended to oppose the financial statements.

7. Approve Maximum Remuneration

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors receive a variable remuneration in the top of their fees and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 146 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 768% of the fixed pay, which is deemed excessive. In addition, there is lack of disclosure with respect of targets and measurable criteria for variable remuneration, which prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment. Opposition is recommended.

4.1.1. Re-Elect Dr. Thomas von Planta - Chair (Non Executive)

Independent Non-Executive Chair of the Board, and Chair of the Strategy and Governance Committee. The chair holds another chair position at a listed company, BB Biotech AG; this arrangement raises time commitment concerns. It is considered that the chair should be able to wholly dedicate their time to the company in times of company crisis, and there is insufficient time to be able to effectively chair two or more companies at the same time. Furthermore, at this time, individual attendance record at board and committee meetings is not disclosed. This prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment on the fulfilment of fiduciary duties and the time that directors commit to the company. It is considered that the Chair of the Strategy and Governance Committee be responsible for inaction in terms of lack of disclosure.

SEMBICORP INDUSTRIES LTD AGM - 25-04-2025

3. Re-Elect Tow Heng Tan - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, member of the Executive Resource and Compensation Committee, and member of the Nominating Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent as he is considered to be connected with a significant shareholder; the director is CEO of Pavilion Capital International, wholly-owned by Temasek Holdings, which is a substantial shareholder of the Company. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. Furthermore, in terms of best practice, it is considered that both the Executive Resource and Compensation Committee, and the Nominating Committee, should be comprised exclusively of independent members. Regardless of the independent representation on the Board as a whole, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

8. Appoint the Auditors and Allow the Board to Determine their Remuneration

KPMG proposed. Non-audit fees represented 0.00% of audit fees during the year under review and 6.67% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. However, the current auditor has been in place for more than ten years. There are concerns that failure to regularly rotate the audit firm can compromise the independence of the auditor.

HYPERA SA AGM - 25-04-2025

1. Approve Financial Statements

Disclosure is acceptable and the report was made available sufficiently before the meeting. However, The Company has not disclosed the fees paid to the auditors for the year under review, and what non-audit services have been provided, if any. Under Brazilian legislation, companies are not required in their financial statements to disclose the amount paid for the External Audit except where additional services have been engaged and the value of such services exceeds 5% of the total amount paid to the external auditor. Nevertheless, it is considered that companies should go beyond minimum regulatory requirements. Not disclosing the fees paid to the auditors is considered to be a serious breach of shareholder accountability, as it is impossible to assess the existence of potential conflicts of interest that would hinder the independence of the auditor. On this ground, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

6. Elect Board: Slate Election

Proposal to elect the Board with a bundled election. Although slate elections are not considered to be best practice, they are common in this market. There is insufficient independent representation on the Board after the meeting as resulting from this slate of candidates.

7. In Case One of the Nominees Leaves the Board of Directors Slate Due to a Separate Minority Election, as Allowed Under Articles 161 and 240 of the Brazilian Corporate Law, May Your Votes Still Be Counted for the Proposed Slate?

It is proposed to count shareholders' vote on the slate, in case one of the candidates on the slate is no longer part of it. At this time, no changes have been communicated and abstention is recommended.

Vote Cast: Abstain

11. In Case Cumulative Voting Is Adopted, Do You Wish to Equally Distribute Your Votes Amongst the Nominees below?

It is proposed to equally distribute votes among candidates in the slate, in case cumulative voting is adopted. Based on the profiles of the candidates and the overall independence of the board, it is considered that not all of the candidates should be supported equally.

Vote Cast: Abstain

10. Approve Maximum Remuneration

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 33,1 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 285% of the fixed pay, which is deemed excessive. In addition, there is lack of disclosure with respect of targets and measurable criteria for variable remuneration, which prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment. Opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

12.12. Cumulative Voting: Percentage of Votes to Be Assigned to Rachel de Oliveira Maia

This candidate is considered to be independent. However, due to concerns over potential aggregate time commitments and failure to demonstrate full attendance at board and committee meetings, abstention is recommended.

Vote Cast: Abstain

13.1. Elect One as Fiscal Council Member and one as Alternate: Valdir Renato Coscodai / Valdir Augusto Assuncao

It is proposed to appoint members of the Fiscal Council in a bundled election: Valdir Renato Coscodai as standing member, Valdir Augusto Assuncao as secondary member. In terms of good governance, it is considered that all of the candidates to the Fiscal Board should be independent. It is regrettable that the Company has bundled their election instead of seeking support for individual candidates. The candidate Valdir Augusto Assuncao is not considered to be independent, as he is considered to be connected with PwC, the company auditor. On this basis, opposition is recommended.

4. Approve Employees' Bonuses

It is proposed to approve a restricted share plan for employees and corporate officers. The Board would receive the authority to set beneficiaries and other conditions. After allotment, shares will be restricted for three years, which is not considered to be sufficiently long term. The Company states that exercise of shares will be based on targets, which at this time remain undisclosed.

Plans to increase employee shareholding are considered to be a positive governance practice, as they can contribute to alignment between employees and shareholders. On the other hand, executives are also among the beneficiaries: it is considered that support should not be given to stock or share option plans that do not lay out clear performance criteria, targets and conditions. On balance, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

5. Approve Maximum Remuneration

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 30,1 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 71.5% of the fixed pay. There is lack of disclosure with respect of targets and measurable criteria for variable remuneration, which prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment. Abstention is recommended.

9. Approve Remuneration of Fiscal Council

The Board is seeking approval for remuneration of the Fiscal Council. Members of the Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees, which is welcomed. AZRIELI GROUP EGM - 27-04-20252. Approve Grant of Options to Ron Avidan, Incoming CEO

The resolution seeks shareholder approval for granting Mr. Ron Avidan, the incoming CEO, a total of 125,081 stock options under the company's equity incentive plan, representing approximately 0.10% of the issued share capital. These options will vest in four equal tranches over four years and are exercisable at a price of ILS 285.16 per share under a net-settlement mechanism. However, the grant lacks any disclosed performance conditions, which undermines its alignment with shareholder interests and long-term value creation. Moreover, the potential total value of the options and annual bonus-when combined-may exceed 200% of Mr. Avidan's base salary, raising concerns about excessive executive pay without sufficient justification or safeguards. Accordingly, in the absence of clear performance criteria and with the risk of disproportionate remuneration, this proposal does not appear to be in the best interest of shareholders. Opposition is recommended.

UOL GROUP LTD AGM - 28-04-2025

4. Elect Wee Ee Lim - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board and member of the Remuneration and Nominating Committees. Not considered to be independent as he is deemed to have an interest in 29.71% of the Company's issued share capital, as well as a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this.

Furthermore, the level of gender diversity on the board is below 20%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nominating Committee Chair is not up for election, a member of the committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Opposition is recommended. Oppose vote is therefore recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

7. Appoint the Auditors

PwC proposed. Non-audit fees represented 47.88% of audit fees during the year under review and 32.67% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees raises some concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor.

Vote Cast: Abstain

8. Approve General Share Issue Mandate

The authority is limited to 50% of the share capital on a pro-rata basis and no more than 20% can be issued without pre-emptive rights. The mandate expires at the next Annual General Meeting. 2. Approve the Remuneration Report

Disclosure: All elements of the Single Total Remuneration Table are adequately disclosed. The CEO did not see a salary increase in the year under review. The CEO's salary is in the upper quartile of PIRC's comparator group, which raises concerns around excessiveness.

Balance: The CEO's total variable pay for the year under review was 299.26% of the fixed salary (Annual Bonus 58.54% and Buy-Out awards 240.72%), which is deemed excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 200%. The CEO's pay ratio is 75:1, which is deemed excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 20:1.

3. Re-elect David Lowden - Chair (Non Executive)

Independent Non-Executive Chair of the Board and Chair of the Nomination Committee. The chair holds another chair position at a listed company, which raises time commitment concerns. It is considered that the chair should be able to wholly dedicate their time to the company in times of company crisis. The COVID pandemic has shown that there are times when multiple unrelated companies will require the Chair's full attention in order to be able to handle times of crisis. It is considered that there is insufficient time to be able to effectively chair two or more companies at the same time.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 40%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. 7. Approval of the Components of Compensation and Benefits of Any Kind Paid During or Allocated for 2024 to Arnaud de Puyfontaine, Chairman of the Management Board

It is proposed to approve the implementation paid or due to Arnaud de Puyfontaine. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against

8. Amend Articles: Virtual Meetings

It is proposed to amend the articles in order to allow virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing virtual-only meetings.

It is proposed to fix the maximum amount available to directors, for the purpose of buying shares on the market. Although this is technically not an authority to repurchase shares, shareholders in Mexico do not approve individual authorities to repurchase shares. As such, identifying the total amount which can be used for repurchasing shares is considered an indirect authority to buy back shares on the market. These resolutions will not be supported unless the Board has set forth a clear, cogent and compelling case demonstrating how the authority would benefit long-term shareholders. As no clear justification was provided by the Board, an oppose vote is recommended.

ATLAS COPCO AB AGM - 29-04-2025

8.a. Approve Financial Statements

The financial statements were made available sufficiently before the meeting and has been audited and certified. However, there are some concerns surrounding the board-level governance of sustainability issues, policies and practice. As such, it is considered that the annual report and the financial statements may not accurately reflect the material and financial impact of non-traditional financial risks. These concerns should have been addressed in the financial statements submitted to shareholders, but the financial statements fail to address these concerns and it is recommended to abstain from voting on this resolution.

10.a2. Re-elect Johan Forssell - Non-Executive Director

Non-Executive Director and member of the Audit Committee. Not considered to be independent as he was a member of the management group of Investor AB, which holds a significant percentage of the Company's share capital. Furthermore the director is not considered independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is considered that the audit committee should be comprised of independent directors and there is insufficient independent representation on the Board, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

10.a8. Re-elect Hans Stråberg - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, Member of the Audit and Nominating Committees and Chair of the Remuneration Committee. The Director is not considered independent as the director is considered to be connected with a significant shareholder: Investor AB, where he sits on the Board of Directors. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this and it is also considered best practice for the audit, nomination and remuneration committee to be fully independent.

The Chair of the Board is considered to be accountable for the Company's sustainability programme, and the Company's sustainability policies and practice are not considered adequate to minimise the material risks linked to sustainability.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Opposition is recommended.

10.a9. Re-elect Peter Wallenberg Jr - Non-Executive Director

Non-Executive Director and Member of the Remuneration Committee. Not considered independent as the director is considered to be connected with a significant

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, being under 200% of the fixed salary. There are claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration, which is welcomed. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. PACCAR INC. AGM - 29-04-2025

1a.. Elect Mark C. Pigott - Chair (Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board. The Chair is not considered to be independent as he served as Chair and CEO of the Company from January 1997 until his appointment as Executive Chair in April 2014. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this.

1a.. Re-Elect James Abrahamson - Chair (Non Executive)

Independent Non-Executive Chair of the Board.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

With this resolution, the board is seeking authority that members and other executives of the company may participate in boards and/or in the managements of competing companies. This authority is not sought for defined appointments. As a consequence, if approved, this authority may lead to potential time commitment concerns. 7.. Shareholder Vote on Financial Statement Assumptions and Climate Change

Proponent Shareholder: National Center for Public Policy Research

Proponent's argument: The proponent requests that Citi produce an audited report analysing how applying the findings of the Energy Policy Research Foundation (EPRF) and similar studies would affect the assumptions and estimates underlying its financial statements. These would include valuations tied to commodity and carbon pricing, asset lives, capital expenditures, and impairments. The proposal argues that Citi's net-zero policies are based on flawed assumptions from the IEA's Net Zero Emissions scenario and similar models, which the EPRF contends underestimate the role of fossil fuels and overstate the feasibility of renewable energy transitions. The resolution expresses concern that Citi's current climate strategy could expose it to financial risk if global energy policy or economic conditions deviate from these scenarios. The proponents suggest that renewable energy investments themselves may become "stranded assets" if based on unrealistic projections, and warn that most countries are unlikely to eliminate fossil fuel usage entirely. The report is requested to be published by February 2026, at reasonable cost, and excluding proprietary information.

Company's response: Citi opposes the proposal, asserting that it already applies rigorous, audited financial reporting standards and a comprehensive climate risk management framework. Citi explains that asset valuations are governed under GAAP and audited for compliance with FAS 157, ensuring objectivity. Strategic planning decisions are informed by a wide range of data sources, scenario analyses, and regulatory frameworks such as OCC 2023-33 and SR 23-9, which set expectations for managing climate-related financial risks. Citi highlights that it incorporates both extreme and probable climate outcomes into strategic planning to ensure financial resilience. The company's net-zero strategy is supported by client engagement and aligns with business opportunities in the energy transition. Citi believes the proposed report would duplicate existing processes and is unnecessary given the transparency already provided in its 10-K filings, Climate Report, and Climate Report Supplement. Accordingly, the Board recommends shareholders vote against the resolution.

PIRC Recommendation: PIRC opposes this resolution. The proposal is based on a rejection of widely accepted scientific and regulatory consensus around climate risk and mischaracterises the foundation of Citi's net-zero strategy. Citi already discloses material climate-related risks in line with market standards and regulatory requirements. Producing an additional report grounded in contested assumptions would not enhance governance or risk management and may instead undermine investor confidence in Citi's climate leadership. Support is not warranted, and opposition is recommended.

Non-Executive Director, member of the Group Nomination and Remuneration Committee. Not considered independent as the director is considered to be connected with a significant shareholder: he worked as Chief Investment Officer at Khazanah Nasional Berhad, a major shareholder. It is considered that the Nomination and Remuneration Committee should consist of a majority of independent directors. Due to the insufficient independent representation on the Committee, and regardless of the independent representation on the Board as a whole, opposition is recommended.

7. Approve Fees Payable to the Board of Directors

It is proposed to increase the amount payable to the Board of Directors by more than 10% per director on annual basis. The increase is considered material and exceeds guidelines, while the company has not duly justified it. Therefore, opposition is recommended.

6. Approve Maximum Remuneration

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors receive a variable remuneration in the top of their fees and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 159,9 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 748% of the fixed pay, which is deemed excessive. In addition, there is lack of disclosure with respect of targets and measurable criteria for variable remuneration, which prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment. Opposition is recommended.

7. Approve Remuneration of Fiscal Council

Independent Non-Executive Chair of the Board and Chair of the Nomination Committee. The chair holds another chair position at a listed company, which raises time commitment concerns. It is considered that the chair should be able to wholly dedicate their time to the company in times of company crisis. The COVID pandemic has shown that there are times when multiple unrelated companies will require the Chair's full attention in order to be able to handle times of crisis. It is considered that there is insufficient time to be able to effectively chair two or more companies at the same time. As there is no Board-level Chair of a Sustainability Committee up for election, the Chair of the Board is considered accountable for the Company's sustainability programme. The Company's sustainability policies and practice are not considered adequate to minimise the material risks linked to sustainability. Opposition is recommended.

11. Re-appoint BDO LLP as the Auditors of the Company

BDO LLP proposed. Non-audit fees represented 9.09% of audit fees during the year under review and 10.00% on a three-year aggregate basis. This level of non-audit fees does not raise serious concerns about the independence of the statutory auditor. The current auditor has been in place for more than five years. ELEMENTIS PLC AGM - 29-04-2025

3. Approve Remuneration Policy

The Remuneration Policy is considered to work effectively as it is, so the only proposed changes for this year involve an update to the trigger events for the malus and clawback provisions. The maximum variable pay available to the CEO is 350% of the fixed salary, which is deemed excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 200%. Half of the Annual Bonus defers into shares for a period of two years. The quantity of Bonus deferred is considered in line with best practise, however, we would like to see this amount deferred for at least three-years. The performance period for the LTIP is three years, which is deemed overly short-term, however, an additional holding period of two-years applies post-vesting, which is welcomed. The inclusion of non-financial performance metrics for the LTIP is also welcomed. Malus and clawback provisions apply to all aspects of the variable pay.

Balance: The CEO's total variable pay in the year under review was 240.58% of the fixed salary, which is deemed somewhat excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 200%. The CEO's pay ratio is 34:1, which is deemed excessive when compared to the maximum recommended limit of 20:1.

19. Authorise the Board to Increase the Number of Shares Issued in case of Exceptional Demand

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 15%, in case of exceptional demand.

In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 15% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. 1i.. Re-elect Stephen J. Squeri - Chair & Chief Executive

Chair and CEO. Combined roles at the head of the Company. There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the Company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the Company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. Combining the two roles in one person represents a concentration of power that is potentially detrimental to board balance, effective debate, and board appraisal.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

4.. Shareholder Resolution: DEI Goals in Executive Pay Incentives

Proponent Shareholder: National Legal and Policy Center

Proponent's argument: The proponent, National Legal and Policy Center, calls on American Express to revisit and consider eliminating diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) goals from executive compensation programs. Citing the U.S. Supreme Court's 2023 decision in Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard, the proponent argues that the legal landscape has shifted significantly, with growing litigation risks associated with race based employment and contracting decisions. The proposal expresses concern that DEI metrics embedded within executive pay specifically within the "Colleague" component of the company's annual incentive awards may expose American Express to reputational, regulatory, and litigation risks. These risks are said to arise from perceived discriminatory practices that favor specific identity groups over others, such as increased spending with suppliers from "underrepresented" communities. The proposal criticises the subjective nature of these incentive goals and their alignment with non-GAAP metrics, raising concerns over SEC compliance. It also references public commentary and legal opinions warning against race- and gender focused initiatives in the corporate setting. The proponent urges the Compensation and Benefits Committee to re-evaluate and potentially remove DEI driven criteria from executive compensation to reduce risk exposure and maintain shareholder value.

Company's response: The company opposes the proposal, stating that it is unnecessary as diversity related performance metrics have already been removed from executive compensation. The Board highlights that its Compensation and Benefits Committee eliminated the "Diversity Representation" goal from the Company Scorecard in 2024 following the prior year's Say-on-Pay vote and governance feedback. The updated Scorecard increases the weighting of financial performance metrics and reduces the "Colleague" category to focus only on Talent Retention and Culture, assessed via the Annual Colleague Experience Survey. The Board asserts that the 2024 adjustments, which continue into 2025, address the concerns raised by the proposal, rendering it obsolete. Additionally, the Compensation and Benefits Committee already conducts annual reviews of the executive compensation structure to ensure alignment with legal standards, shareholder input, and strategic priorities. The company emphasises the Board's broad discretion in structuring compensation programs and assures compliance with SEC disclosure requirements. Thus, the proposal is deemed redundant and without added value to shareholders. The Board recommends voting against the proposal.

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of staff diversity lie in widening the perspectives brought to bear on decision making, reducing groupthink, and enhancing the company's understanding of its workforce, customer base, supply chain, and broader societal context. Transparent reporting on workforce composition and progress against stated diversity goals enables shareholders to assess whether the company is fostering an inclusive culture aligned with long-term value creation. Policies and targets relating to diversity demonstrate a proactive approach to talent management and corporate governance. However, this resolution appears to serve as a spoiler tactic by a politically motivated group aiming to undermine corporate DEI initiatives. It frames diversity objectives within executive compensation as discriminatory and litigious, while overlooking evidence of the long-term strategic benefits of inclusion for employee engagement, innovation, and stakeholder trust. Its narrowly framed financial and legal concerns are weighted toward immediate compliance risks and short-term cost, rather than a balanced assessment of the broader business case for DEI. Moreover, the resolution seeks to micromanage compensation policy that the company has already adjusted in response to shareholder feedback, rendering the proposal unnecessary. Opposition is recommended.

5.. Shareholder Resolution: Civil Liberties in Advertising Services

Proponent Shareholder: Thomas Rivers, c/o Bowyer Research, Inc.

Proponent's argument: The proposal, introduced by Thomas Rivers through Bowyer Research, urges American Express to evaluate and report on risks associated with potential discrimination in its advertising services, particularly on the basis of political or religious viewpoints. The proponent argues that American Express participated in practices that could suppress lawful expression by collaborating with the Global Alliance for Responsible Media (GARM), an initiative under the World Federation of Advertisers, which the proponent alleges pushed for the demonetisation of media platforms over subjective criteria like "hate speech," "disinformation," and "insensitive" content. The proposal warns these vague standards could be exploited to stifle differing political and religious perspectives, with GARM cited for endorsing controversial entities like the Global Disinformation Index and NewsGuard. The proponent contends that such actions could expose the company to legal liabilities under antitrust and anti-discrimination laws and damage its reputation. The proposal requests a board level evaluation and public report on how the company oversees risks related to politically or religiously motivated discrimination in advertising decisions.

Company's Response: The Company opposes the proposal, stating that it does not engage in discriminatory practices against advertising buyers or sellers based on political or religious affiliations or views. American Express emphasises that its advertising decisions are guided by independently developed Media Brand Safety Guidelines and values based policies that prohibit bias or discrimination. The Board asserts that the company maintains strong commitments to fairness, integrity, and legal compliance, reinforced through its Code of Conduct and Ethics Hotline. The company supports fair competition and highlights its compliance with antitrust laws via its Antitrust Compliance Policy. The Audit and Compliance Committee already provides oversight of these areas, including compliance with laws, regulations, and internal policies. Therefore, the Board concludes that the requested report is unnecessary and would not benefit shareholders. The Board recommends voting AGAINST the proposal, citing existing safeguards, a lack of discriminatory policy or practice, and effective governance structures already in place.

PIRC analysis: While the safeguarding of civil liberties, including freedom of expression, is vital, this proposal appears to be ideologically driven and rooted in a broader political agenda rather than a genuine concern for transparent advertising governance. The resolution frames widely accepted industry efforts to reduce misinformation, hate speech, and discriminatory content as censorship, and targets collaborative initiatives such as the Global Alliance for Responsible Media, which was established to uphold brand safety and reduce reputational and regulatory risk across the advertising industry. Rather than seeking transparency or accountability in a neutral manner, the proposal characterises common content moderation standards as discriminatory against political or religious viewpoints despite no evidence being presented that American Express engages in such practices. Its framing aligns with a growing trend of right-wing shareholder activism that challenges corporate commitments to responsible digital advertising and content integrity under the guise of defending free speech. The company has affirmed that it does not engage in discrimination based on political or religious affiliation and has mechanisms in place such as its Code of Conduct and oversight by the Audit and Compliance Committee to ensure compliance with relevant laws and internal policies. The request for an additional report, particularly when framed in a partisan context that undermines efforts to counter misinformation and harmful content, does not present a constructive path forward. Opposition is recommended.

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. II.a. Approve Financial Statements and Allocation of Income

The Board seeks shareholders' approval for the consolidated and individual financial statements for the year under review. Disclosure is adequate. The financial statements have been audited and the auditors have not qualified their opinion. The reports have been made available to shareholders sufficiently prior to the date of the general meeting. However, the Board has not made the dividend proposal available sufficiently before the meeting. It would be welcomed that the Company submitted the approval of the financial statements and the allocation of income individually, under two separate resolutions. Due to the lack of disclosure concerning the dividend, abstention is recommended.

Vote Cast: Abstain

II.b. Approve the Dividend

The dividend proposal was not made available in sufficient time prior to the meeting. On this basis, abstention is recommended.

Vote Cast: Abstain

II.c. Authorise Share Repurchase

It is proposed to fix the maximum amount available to directors, for the purpose of buying shares on the market. Although this is technically not an authority to repurchase shares, shareholders in Mexico do not approve individual authorities to repurchase shares. As such, identifying the total amount which can be used for repurchasing shares is considered an indirect authority to buy back shares on the market. These resolutions will not be supported unless the Board has set forth a clear, cogent and compelling case demonstrating how the authority would benefit long-term shareholders. As no clear justification was provided by the Board, an oppose vote is recommended.

III.d. Approve Fees Payable to the Board of Directors

No proposal is available at the present time. As per market practice, the proposed remuneration is likely to be made available only at the meeting. Although this is a common practice for a standard item in this market, support will not be suggested for resolutions concerning remuneration when sufficient information has not been made available for shareholders in sufficient time prior to the meeting, as such practice prevents shareholders from reaching an informed decision. Abstention from voting this resolution is recommended.

9. Approve Financial Statements

The financial statements were made available sufficiently before the meeting and has been audited and certified. However, there are some concerns surrounding the board-level governance of sustainability issues, policies and practice. As such, it is considered that the annual report and the financial statements may not accurately reflect the material and financial impact of non-traditional financial risks. These concerns should have been addressed in the financial statements submitted to shareholders, but the financial statements fail to address these concerns and it is recommended to abstain from voting on this resolution.

14.3. Re-elect Johan Molin - Chair (Non Executive)

Non-Executive Chair of the Board, member of the Audit Committee and Chair of the Remuneration Committee. The Chair is not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. It is a generally accepted norm of good practice that a Chair of the Board should act with a proper degree of independence from the Company's management team when exercising his or her oversight of the functioning of the Board. Being a non-independent Chair is considered to be incompatible with this. In terms of best practice, it is considered that the Audit and Remuneration Committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair. As there is no Sustainability Committee, the Chair of the Board is considered accountable for the Company's sustainability programme. As the Company's sustainability policies and practice are not considered adequate to minimise the material risks linked to sustainability an oppose vote is recommended.

The level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. Given the Nomination Committee's responsibility for board composition and diversity oversight, the Chair of the Committee bears accountability for this shortfall. Opposition is recommended.

16. Appoint the Auditors

PwC proposed. Non-audit fees represented 12.77% of audit fees during the year under review and 56.03% on a three-year aggregate basis. 1. Approve Financial Statements

Disclosure is acceptable and the report was made available sufficiently before the meeting. However, The Company has not disclosed the fees paid to the auditors for the year under review, and what non-audit services have been provided, if any. Under Brazilian legislation, companies are not required in their financial statements to disclose the amount paid for the External Audit except where additional services have been engaged and the value of such services exceeds 5% of the total amount paid to the external auditor. Nevertheless, it is considered that companies should go beyond minimum regulatory requirements. Not disclosing the fees paid to the auditors is considered to be a serious breach of shareholder accountability, as it is impossible to assess the existence of potential conflicts of interest that would hinder the independence of the auditor. On this ground, opposition is recommended.

3. Approve Maximum Remuneration

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 10,4 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 390% of the fixed pay, which is deemed excessive. In addition, there is lack of disclosure with respect of targets and measurable criteria for variable remuneration, which prevents shareholders from making an informed assessment. Opposition is recommended.

We consider this to be an excessive premium that may not represent a prudent use of shareholder capital. It is proposed to issue additional Tier 1 capital bonds, at an interest rate to be determined with reference to market interest rates.

The use of Tier 1 capital bonds are not considered appropriate as they put investors at significant risk of dilution in the event that conversion occurs. Such instrument are relatively new instruments and there are concerns that they may create a situation which whilst converting some debt to equity actually disincentivises equity investors from putting more new funds in to banks via rights issues, due to the dilutive effect of the conversion taking away much, or some, of the premium that would ordinarily accrue to shareholders. 1h.. Re-elect William H. Rogers, Jr. - Chair & Chief Executive

Chair and CEO. Combined roles at the head of the Company. There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the Company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the Company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. Combining the two roles in one person represents a concentration of power that is potentially detrimental to board balance, effective debate, and board appraisal.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

1f.. Re-elect Arvind Krishna - Chair & Chief Executive

Chair and CEO. Combined roles at the head of the Company. There should be a clear division of responsibilities at the head of the Company between the running of the board and the executive responsibility for the running of the Company's business. No one individual should have unfettered powers of decision. Combining the two roles in one person represents a concentration of power that is potentially detrimental to board balance, effective debate, and board appraisal.

The articles of association include provisions allowing for the convening of virtual-only meetings. The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing the Chair of the Board.

Moreover, the level of gender diversity on the board is below 33%, which does not align with best practices for diverse board representation. 5.. Shareholder Resolution: Report on Hiring/Recruitment Discrimination

Proponent's argument: The Heritage Foundation request the Board of Directors of IBM conduct an evaluation and issue a report within the next year, at reasonable cost and excluding confidential information, assessing how the Company's DEI requirements for hiring/recruitment impact IBM's risks related to discrimination against individuals based on their race, color, religion (including religious views), sex, national origin, or political views. Shareholders argue that: "IBM is engaging in recruitment and promotion practices that prioritize so-called Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion and expose the company to charges of not only running afoul of its legal responsibilities for non-discrimination, but jettisoning its fiduciary duty to maximize shareholder return. [...] IBM should avoid needless political controversies and illegal discrimination and support fundamental freedoms that are of broad societal impact and benefit every American. One step to do this is by increasing transparency around its hiring/promotion practices to ensure such practices are focusing on business goals as opposed to corporate activism."

Company's response: The board recommended a vote against this proposal. The board argues the following: "IBM is an equal opportunity employer. Its policies regarding recruiting and hiring are clearly outlined on our recruiting website and application portals, as referenced below. The Company neither has a policy that sets any "recruitment quotas" for executives nor has a policy that threatens any executive with "slashed bonuses, demotion, or termination of employment" over failure to meet the nonexistent "recruitment quotas." The proposal does not cite any specific Company policy or provide any evidence that such a policy exists. [...] The Company publicly discloses its workforce demographics associated with race and gender in the annual IBM Impact Report. The IBM Impact Report also clearly outlines our efforts regarding inclusion and the associated metrics. Finally, the Company periodically reviews all hiring and recruiting processes globally for compliance with government regulations and alignment with its corporate culture and values. In sum, IBM acts transparently in its hiring and recruiting practices, and, as such contends that the request for a comprehensive review of its DE&I programs and policies is unnecessary."

PIRC analysis: The potential benefits of staff diversity lie in widening the perspectives on human resources brought to bear on decision-making, avoiding too great a similarity of attitude and helping companies understand their workforces as a kaleidoscope of customers, marketplace, supply chain and society as a whole. Disclosure surrounding the company's staff composition allows shareholders to consider diversity in the context of the long-term interests of the company, including the ability to attract and retain key talent. Disclosure of a policy to improve diversity and goals that have been set to meet this policy also reassures shareholders that a diverse board is not just an aspiration but a goal. However, this resolution appears to be filed by a right-wing policy think tanks as a spoiler resolution to prevent other shareholders from filing resolutions regarding the company's diversity and focuses on ideological diversity with the clear intent to ensure that conservative views are represented on the board as well as so-called liberal perspectives. A vote against the resolution is recommended.

EMBRAER SA AGM - 29-04-2025

1. Approve Financial Statements

Disclosure is acceptable and the report was made available sufficiently before the meeting. However, The Company has not disclosed the fees paid to the auditors for the year under review, and what non-audit services have been provided, if any. Under Brazilian legislation, companies are not required in their financial statements to disclose the amount paid for the External Audit except where additional services have been engaged and the value of such services exceeds 5% of the total amount paid to the external auditor. Nevertheless, it is considered that companies should go beyond minimum regulatory requirements. Not disclosing the fees paid to the auditors is considered to be a serious breach of shareholder accountability, as it is impossible to assess the existence of potential conflicts of interest that would hinder the independence of the auditor. On this ground, opposition is recommended.

11. Approve Maximum Remuneration

It is proposed to approve the maximum compensation for Directors, Management and Fiscal Council for next year. It is regrettable that the Company bundled these items, however it is common practice in this market. The amount proposed under this resolution is not the actual remuneration but the global remuneration cap, and includes fixed salaries and short term incentives.

Directors and Fiscal Council receive only fixed fees. For Management, it is proposed to cap remuneration at BRL 82,3 million. Variable remuneration for executives would correspond to up to 857% of the fixed pay, which is deemed excessive. 13. Elect Fields Wicker-Miurin - Non-Executive Director

Non-Executive Director, Chair of the Remuneration Committee and Member of the Nomination Committee. Not considered to be independent owing to a tenure of over nine years. In terms of best practice, it is considered that these committees should be comprised exclusively of independent members, including the chair.

20. Issue Shares Without Pre-Emptive Rights

Authority to issue shares without pre-emptive rights is proposed for less than 10% of the current share capital. However; the duration of the authority exceeds 18 months. It is considered that shareholders should have the occasion to vote on such resolutions annually or at least at the next AGM.

Vote Cast: Oppose

21. Approve General Authority to Issue of Shares via Private Placement to Qualified Investors

The Board requests authority to approve a global authority for the issue of capital related securities without pre-emptive rights by private placement to qualified investors. The authorisation is valid up to 10% of the issued share capital over a period of 26 months. This authority is not requested in connection with a particular operation and has not been duly justified by the Company. Opposition is therefore recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

22. Approve Issue of Shares for Private Placement to Designated Investors

The Board seeks authority to approve a targeted issue of shares by private placement to one or more specifically designated investors, without pre-emptive rights. As this is not linked to a specific transaction and has not been adequately justified, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

23. Approve Issue of Shares for Contribution in Kind in a Public Offer Scenario

The Board requests authority to issue shares and capital securities in consideration for contributions in kind up to 10% of the issued share capital over a period of 26 months. The proposal is within legal limits, however it can be implemented also in time of public offer. Opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

25. Authorise the Board to Increase the Number of Shares Issued in case of Exceptional Demand

In addition to the share issuance authorities sought above, the Board requests shareholder authority for a capital increase of additional 15%, in case of exceptional demand.

A green shoe authorisation enables an authorization of additional shares in the event of exceptional public demand. In this case, the authorization would increase allow the placement of up to 15% additional new shares within a thirty day period at a price equal to that of the initial offer. There are concerns with such authorities as they may potentially represent a discount superior to the discount to which the initial authorisation is limited due to a potential rise in share price in the period between original issuance and secondary issuance. Given the potential for inequitable treatment of shareholders, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

26. Issue of Warrants for Contingent Capital Programme

The Board requests authority to issue contingent warrants to specific investors, which may be exercised in the event of extreme events such as natural or man-made catastrophes adversely impacting the Group's solvency or profitability. The authority permits the issuance of new shares representing up to 10% of the issued share capital over a period of 18 months, at a discount of up to 10%. This exceeds the 5% discount cap under Article R225-119 of the French Commercial Code and raises concerns over dilution and equitable treatment of shareholders. Opposition is therefore recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

27. Issue of Warrants for Ancillary Own Funds Programme

The Board seeks approval to issue up to 10% of the Company's issued share capital through ancillary own fund warrants, which may be exercised to reinforce regulatory capital in times of financial stress. This authority would allow discounted share issuances of up to 10% over 18 months, deviating from standard pricing conditions. As the discount level exceeds the legal limit of 5% under Article R225-119 of the French Commercial Code and the authorisation presents dilution risks, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

29. Approve Grant of Share Subscription and Purchase Options to Employees and Executives

The Board proposes to authorise the grant of share subscription and purchase options to employees and executive corporate officers, up to 1,000,000 ordinary shares. Options are subject to performance and service conditions assessed over at least three years; however, performance targets are not fully disclosed, which prevents a proper assessment of pay-for-performance alignment. Shareholders' pre-emptive rights are waived. As transparency is insufficient and the potential dilution not clearly justified, opposition is recommended.

Vote Cast: Oppose

30. Approve Free Award of Existing Shares to Employees and Executives

The Board seeks authorisation to grant existing shares free of charge to employees and executive officers, up to a value of EUR 3.5 million. All grants to executive officers are to be subject to performance conditions assessed over at least three years, and the shares will vest after a minimum three-year period. While some conditions are in place, performance metrics have not been sufficiently detailed and the plan allows broad discretion in allocation. Opposition is recommended due to a lack of transparency.

Vote Cast: Oppose

31. Approve Issue of Shares for Employee Saving Plan

Authority for a capital increase of less than 2% of the current share capital for employees participating to saving plans. The maximum discount applied will be 30% on the market share price. It is considered that it is in the best interests of the company and its shareholders to provide employees with an opportunity to benefit from business success and increase their share ownership. However, the discount to be applied exceeds guidelines (20%). Opposition is therefore recommended.

It is proposed to approve the remuneration paid or due to executives with an advisory vote. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. The Company has fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated, although there are no claw back clauses in place over the entirety of the variable remuneration component which makes it unlikely that shareholders will be able to reclaim any variable remuneration unfairly paid out. The company has not used any climate-related metrics in determining bonuses paid during the year. As such it is recommended to oppose the remuneration report.

It is proposed to approve the implementation of the remuneration policy. The payout is in line with best practice, under 200% of the fixed salary. However, the Company has not fully disclosed quantified targets against which the achievements and the corresponding variable remuneration has been calculated. Although a common practice in this market as this is deemed to be sensitive information, it prevents an accurate assessment and may lead to overpayment against underperformance. 11. Approval of the Proposed Alterations to the Constitution

It is proposed to update the company's Constitution to allow for hybrid and virtual meetings in line with the 2023 Amendment Act, and to enable electronic submission of proxy appointments. The notice period for ordinary resolutions will be reduced to 14 days, while the company will also gain flexibility in making electronic payments for dividends. Other updates include clarifying the chairing of meetings, updating provisions for the service of notices, and correcting typographical errors.

The decision to remove the ability for shareholders to attend meetings in person is significant and could potentially limit shareholder engagement and transparency. Virtual-only meetings may restrict the ability of shareholders to effectively participate, ask questions, and engage with company management and the board. Shareholders should carefully consider the implications of such amendments and advocate for practices that uphold shareholder rights and promote transparency in corporate governance. We welcome the possibility of hybrid meetings as a way to increase participation and transparency, however virtual-only meetings should not be used lightly and should be restricted only to cases where in-person attendance is impossible due to public health crisis or natural disasters. Without a clear justification, we recommend opposing virtual-only meetings.

FINECOBANK SPA AGM - 29-04-2025*0060. Approve 2025 Incentive System for Employees "Identified Staff"*

The Board proposes the approval of a new incentive plan. Under the plan, the CEO and other executives will be awarded options or rights to receive shares, which will start vesting after three years from the date of award. Performance targets have not been fully quantified at this time, which makes an informed assessment impossible and may lead to (partial) payment against (partial) failure. Plans to increase employee shareholding are considered to be a positive governance practice, as they can contribute to alignment between employees and shareholders. On the other hand, executives are also among the beneficiaries: it is considered that support should not be given to stock or share option plans that do not lay out clear performance criteria, targets and conditions.
